FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

In a letter to the London Times of the 13th, Lord Randolph Churchill, leader of Opposition in the House of Commons, makes a violent attack upon Lord Granville, Minister of Foreign Affairs, on account of the latter's recent speech explaining the agreement between himself and the Russian representatives. Lord Churchill alludes to Lord Granville as a "malicious, sneaky and incapable Whig, and an unhappy man." The attack appears to be fully as much a personal as a political one and is certain to cause a sensation.

The London Standard advises the Opposition that it is useless to occupy the time of the session with mere motions of censure upon the Government. They should rather prepare for the coming struggle in which they are to meet the electors face to face.

It is stated that a large majority of Non-Conformists and a respectable minority of Churchmen in England do not favor the adoption of the revised Bible in worship, and it is doubtful if it will ever displace the King James version. Besides, this version being copyrighted in the hands of two publishing houses, adds to the difficulty of making its use popular. There is an immense demand for copies, but publishing experts say that this is from curiosity and literary interest, which will soon decrease.

FASHION NOTES.

The Tendency to Woman's Dresses—Hits of Information.

The fashions this spring tend toward ample fullness in the back, the long bouffant tunics and apron overdresses being much more favored than panier effects. Pleats, folds, antique draperies, vests, waistcoats, round waists with belts of ribbon or velvet, hooked, clasped, buckled or tied, are each and all of "universal" adoption.

The bodices to many of the new princesse-slips of foundation silks are now very frequently cut low in the neck, while the second bodice above, of lace or grenadine, is high to the throat—a becoming and very pretty fashion revived, and one exceedingly comfortable during the torrid days and evenings of July and August. The princesse-slip is cut to fit the form like a glove; much gored in front, and moderately full in the back, as the slip itself is but a beautifully tinted foundation for the lace or other airy drapings which wholly veil it.

Dress collars are worn immensely high this season, in military fashion, and are most generally made of velvet, no matter what the dress itself is formed of. Some of these are made wholly of plain velvet, and fastened in front by two jewelled collar-buttons, secured by a guard-chain of fine gold. Others are braided, gold-embroidered, piped, or lace-edged, top and bottom, to suit individual fancy.

Many of the most expensive white costumes designed for afternoon and evening wear the coming season, have round waists made very plain, the rich embroidery and lace garniture being expended upon the sleeves and the front portion of the bodice only, this often in the form of a lace waistband or a Fedora vest of embroidery. This plain mode of making the waists is employed for the reason that en suite are the pretty little zouave jackets, of either dark ruby or dark-blue velvet, to be worn above, thus revealing only the white waist beneath, from throat to belt in front, and the dainty lace sleeves; for nine out of ten of the zouave and Russian jackets are sleeveless.

Satin-finished silks, gros grains, Ottomans, fine and heavy cords, and lusterless armures are all imported among the tempting array of silks for the season. Light qualities of gros d'Ecosse and gros de Londre are preferred, among Ottoman silks, to the very heavy Muscovite cords in vogue during the winter. Gros-grain silks in coarse and fine cords are manufactured in a great variety of attractive weaves and qualities. The brands of the new gros grains made by standard firms are distinguished by a beautiful satin luster, and are exquisitely soft and rich in appearance. There is a steady demand for these handsome goods, and a fine quality of gros grain will be found more durable, and will give more satisfaction in general wear than any of the scores of "fancy" silks and satins now in market.

An exceedingly rich and beautiful reception dress was lately completed, which would be a novel and graceful model for other less expensive to lets. The bodice and train were made of palest mauve satin, brocaded in arabesque patterns of raised velvet of a deep violet shade. Down the front, from belt to tiny knife pleating of satin at the foot of the skirt, were laid folds of plain dark velvet, the center forming one very wide panel coming directly in front. This single panel was hand-embroidered in colors of pale mauve, shading to heliotrope and violet, in silk and arrasene embroidery. The narrow vest front on the bodice was decorated to correspond. A bridal dress of white silk, with a panel and pleats each side of white satin, the panel hand-embroidered or painted, would form a lovely to let. A still richer one of satin, with panel covered with a network of pearls, beads and chenille, would also make a most elegant dress for a bride.

French flannel, rough-finished broadcloth, cashmere and serge are among the most popular suitings now selected by ladies who do not care for checked or striped goods of cheviot or tweed. Ottoman cloths, in rich and showy fruit shades, or in nuns' gray, olive or golden brown, make very tasteful and ladylike suits, while the serges and poplins now so lavishly displayed upon the counters of every leading house are chosen by many on account of their alleged durability for traveling and utility costumes.

Gray, fawn, beige, all shades of brown, from cream-brown to the reddish and golden tones; deep, rich colorings in Neapolitan and royal blue, wine reds, garnet, dark greens, and black are all fashionable colors; but terra-cotta crushed raspberry or strawberry, and all sickly artistic tints have had their day. Exception, however, is made of the new pale half-shades of yellow greens and willow and frog pond greens, which have been urged upon the hands of doubting leaders of the trade, who were assured that these most trying hues would "take" in America, the land of the blonde and the home of the fair. Not so, however, thus far. They serve most effectively in lending a refreshing and delicate vernal look to the shopwindows in fine contrast to the dreary, dab state of things outside, but fall most lamentably short inside, in sale or favor either in dress fabrics or in millinery uses, for entire bonnets or their accessories of hats, flowers, or feathers.—N. Y. Evening Post.

—A retiring Judge in Connecticut has a remarkable record. The Hartford Courant says: "Judge Torrance occupied the bench of the New Haven Common Pleas Court on Monday, probably for the last time. Of the hundreds of decisions he has made while Judge of that court, none has ever been reversed by the Supreme Court of Errors and only one has been changed. In this one case the Supreme Court advised a change in the amount of damages assessed."

—San Francisco gets 900,000 bananas a month from the Sandwich Islands. The number of bananas on a bunch average 110, and they bring in that city at wholesale four dollars per bunch. The sale is large, but to the retailer the profit is small.

A QUEER OLD MAN.

Judge Lawrence, Late First Comptroller of the Treasury, and His Eccentricities.

Old Lawrence is gone, the queer old man. We never shall see his like again. He was the First Comptroller of the Treasury. Within certain limits—the limits of the Treasury jurisdiction—he was the supreme judicial authority. His will was law respecting all questions involved in the settlement of the greater portion of accounts and claims brought to the Treasury Department for adjudication. Lawrence magnified his office as no other First Comptroller ever did. He was fond of talking about its all but absolute power, and fonder of preparing opinions which tended to enlarge its jurisdiction and increase its importance. These "opinions" in the case of his predecessors were simply memoranda for the guidance of other accounting officers of the Treasury. Usually they were in the fewest possible words, and often they were in a very informal form. But Lawrence had had long practice in prolixity. As a lawyer his briefs and arguments, and as a Judge his syllabi and decisions, were noted for their extraordinary length. He was an exhaustive and exhausting man. He always got all the law he could find, even when, as was usual, it was a mere cumulative process, and then stretched it out over an interminable space with all the words he could dig out of the dictionary. They tell a story out in Ohio of a young lawyer who wanted a client's case postponed, and went to Lawrence for advice. Lawrence suggested that he put into his application all the causes for postponement to be found in the State code and the book of practice. "If you don't get it for one," he sagely said, "you will for another." Lawrence was in court when the application was presented. The presiding Judge did not like Lawrence's long speeches and briefs. He glanced over the application, and then read it through carefully. After enumerating the causes which Lawrence had indicted to the young man, the latter had wound up the application thus: "And for all the causes usually presented by William Lawrence in such a case." The Court smiled, and remarked: "I grant the postponement on the last statement in the application. When Lawrence became first Comptroller he resolved to revolutionize the practice of his office with respect to opinions. He determined to render them as frequently as possible, and to make each as long as he could without breaking it. In his mind's eye he saw the shelves of all law libraries loaded with "Opinions of the First Comptroller." He promised himself one hundred volumes of these reports, edited and reported by himself. He saw "First Lawrence," "Forty-first Lawrence," "Ninety-first Lawrence," cited by lawyers and quoted by courts. He had nothing to do but grind out opinions. This he did at extraordinary length and with extraordinary rapidity. He used all the means known to the professional "padder." He filled his opinions with facts and law and maxims and poetry. His syllabi were as long as ordinary opinions. He had all his opinions printed in full at Government expense, and bound in law sheep in the same form as the opinions of the Attorney-General. He got them out about twice as rapidly as either the Attorney-General or the reporter of the United States Supreme Court could publish their compilations. I need not say that the opinions of the First Comptroller had never been reported before. The series began with "First Lawrence." When old Lawrence quoted from "First Lawrence" in arguing a case in which he was counsel (for he kept up his private practice right along) Chief Justice Waite inquired with an amused expression: "What authority did you say?" "First Lawrence," said the author of that large work. "Ah," said the Chief Justice, "and what is that? I do not recognize it." "It's the first volume of my opinions, your honor," said the First Comptroller, not a bit abashed, for is he not an Ohio man? He is very proud of his opinions. He likes their length and he likes the rapid way in which they appeared. Well, he is gone, and I fancy we shall have shorter opinions from the First Comptroller in the future.

A Curious Fact.

A Massachusetts editor says that a great many persons in New England believe that the spring-fed lakes in that part of the country, if not actually bottomless, are at least unfathomable by man. What the editor says is a curious fact, and his statement will appeal as a familiar truth to every reader who was a New England boy, although we do not remember ever to have seen such a statement in print before. Of a score of New England lakes and ponds that we can recall, every one was credited by tradition with having at some particular spot a hole so deep that one was loath to imagine how frightfully far-reaching it was. Young swimmers avoided passing over such holes, in the vague fear that they might encounter suctions which would draw them instantly into the center of the earth, and young skaters shunned their neighborhood, although it might be that the ice above them was two feet thick. We recall one of these holes of tradition in a pond in Western Massachusetts. It was called, quite awfully, Tucker's Hole, and there was a general suspicion that it connected with the Dead Sea at least. The pond was filled up without any difficulty a few years ago, Tucker's Hole along with the rest. Still the other ponds thereabouts continue to have their bottomless holes, and the annihilation of Tucker's Hole has discredited them not in the least.—Harper's Weekly.

DR. A. FRASER'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

MAJOR-GENERAL IRWIN McDOWELL

Science has conferred a favor upon newspaper readers by publishing with its issue for May 1st, a very large map of Central Asia based upon the British and Russian staff maps, showing every point mentioned in despatches and a hundred others which may soon become of interest. This map is about two feet square, but is limited to Afghanistan and adjacent territory. In the same issue of Science are articles upon The Russian base of operations against India. "Roads from India to Central Asia." "The Races of Central Asia." "The Legal Language of India," and reviews of the latest German, French, and English books upon Central Asia. Science for May 1st will represent full and exquisite portraits of members of the National Academy of Sciences, establishing the fact that a series of thirty-five scientific men, mostly of a naturalistic character, have been twice numbered among the forty-five members of the Academy, and in a forty-five years' series taken at six years. The typical mathematician and naturalist will therefore have a fair opportunity to reveal himself, as any distinctive marks of feature, manner is published. Science is published at 4 Lafayette Place, New York.

DIED.

At Tecumseh, Michigan, on Tuesday, May 12th, 1885, Mrs. Sarah Boyd wife of Mr. Robert Boyd of Tecumseh, in the 73d year of her age.

In the death of this excellent woman, not only her husband and relatives, but the Presbyterian church and the whole community have sustained a sad bereavement. She was retiring and unassuming in her disposition, yet she did not live a secluded life. Her visits were always welcome to her friends and she was constantly remembering by acts of kindness the sick and those in trouble. She took an interest in every one, and all felt a confidence in the sincerity of that interest. Hers was one of those lives which though quietly passed, are not lived in vain. Her religion was cheerful in its type and was always the same sustaining, governing power, making her the useful and beloved character that she was. Her death was extremely sudden and unexpected. Yet no one who knew her doubts her readiness to depart, or that she has entered into the rest that remaineth for the people of God. W. H. B.

At his home in Beaver, Dakota, on the 14th inst., Harris McDaniel.

The deceased was born in Bath, Steuben Co., N. Y., Feb. 8th, 1830. He was married in Adrian to Miss Fanny Pomeroy, March 19th, 1855, and for many years thereafter made his home in this village. He has many old acquaintances here who will learn of his demise with sincere regret.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine

for June completes the Seventeenth Volume, with a number of exceptional interest. The opening article is by the eminent traveler, Alvin S. Southworth, and entitled "Catholic Missions in the Far East," principally Farther India, China and Japan, the labors of Francis Xavier and his successors are graphically described. The article on "Bible Heroes" tells of the conquest of Canaan under Joshua and the history of the Israelites under the rule of the judges. This article has twelve illustrations. Portraits and short biographical sketches are given of the three new English Bishops. The Sacred Musicians described are Madame Sainton Dolby, who recently died, and Anton Rubinstein; and the Parables of Christ have reached the thirteenth number with "The Barren Fig tree." Farjeon's story, "Love's Harvest," reaches an interesting point, and Mrs. Farmer's serial "What She made of her Life," progresses favorably. There are several very beautiful poems, and a varied and attractive miscellany, at 25 cents a number, or $2.50 a year, postpaid. Published by Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55, 57 Park Place, New York.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Last Thursday Ed. Carlton drove his mustang to Holloway arriving just in time to meet the east bound mail train. The pony concluded to change ends and in so doing he landed Ed. in the ditch, cutting a hole in his leg about two inches long and down to the bone, besides bruising himself about the face and head. The pony proceeded to smash up the cart after which he started for home on double quick time, but Uncle Ben Kelly took him to his arms and prevailed on him to wait for the boy. After gathering himself up Ed. made his way to Dr. Begels office for repairs, after which he wended his way home a sadder but wiser boy.

Warren Holdridge went up to Jackson on Friday and returned on Monday. We have not ascertained what his business up there was but suspect that it was some scheme with the Ex-Mayor.

Miss Fida Ash who has been sick for several weeks is now improving.

Mrs. Weeks and Mrs. Ramsdell, of Hanovor, are visiting their sister, Mrs. Dr. Begel.

Quite a number of our farmers are planting their corn over on account of poor seed. We have not heard much profanity regarding it. Guess some of them were like the man who said there was no use, he could not do the thing justice.

Van Miller has news from Hiawatha Kansas, informing him of the death of his brother Chas. C. on the 12th inst. Mr. Miller came to Mich. in 1850, and while here learned the milling trade of Woolston Comfort, living for a number of years in the township of Raisin. He leaves a wife and three children to mourn his loss. (Adrian Times please copy.)

Samuel Rogers is building a boss barn. It is 40x80, sided with matched lumber, and when painted it will be one of the finest barns in Raisin. Mr. Rogers wishes to thank his friends from Palmyra and Tecumseh who offered to help raise his barn, but he concluded to raise it with machinery in consequence of which their services were not needed.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Traveling medicine venders have been holding street concerts most every night of the past week, and whether their drugs were good for ills or not, their songs were a tonic for the blues, and attracted a crowd of listeners.

Business is brightening, although farmers have reversed trade hours, and teams are most numerous on the street when it is too dark to plant corn.

All interested in the soldier home project are invited to conference, and arguments for and against providing such an asylum are growing plentiful. The one oftenest quoted is, that twenty years hence, all these disfigured and poverty disqualified veterans will have joined the grand army post above, and the building become a useless expense—blunder—in the eyes of the tax payers. It's no harm to differ honestly from sound doctrine, and the soldiers of 1812 have not died so young as these are expected to. An occasional hint of soldiers being head clerks on County House woodpiles, gets by mistake into rural papers, but is promptly corrected by their city brethren, or if not, their improvidence and no-body-ness in general is set up as an excuse for leaving them in such quarters. Yet eight dollars a month is small pay for being shot at and going through such a process of moral depletion as has been prescribed by circumstances, and though they may not require aid beyond the specified time, it is a good while to wait in odd corners of wretchedness for the Lord's roll call. Would it not be as creditable and economical for Michigan to spend two hundred thousand dollars in building a home, even if occupied but twenty years, as to leave them to finish their lives in any fashion neglect decrees? In case a thousand should straggle from county house comfort, it will cost but two hundred a piece, and when they are exchanged into the silent army, why should their home become useless? Judging from the past and present, the future will provide tenants. There are aged veterans besides those battle scarred, who are left alone near the future gate, children to be taught how to work and win independence without rifles, and if Mr. Cook's gift is accepted, there will be a royal farm where they can acquire habits that need no reforming. We are proud of an offer that cannot be treated lightly by those who may prefer some other location. It is much nearer Brooklyn than newspapers state, and as it lies along the direct route from Detroit to Chicago, and easily reached by branch rail roads, it will escape being called an out of the way corner by competitors. It is equally useless to call it a swamp, for nature has favored it lavishly with bank and brae copes and dell, and philanthropists are extremely few who part with such a vineyard without other recompense than the consciousness of having made a turn-stile in the path of weariness.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Weather fine and the farmers are doing their best to improve it. A few of the fortunate ones have all their corn in. The others will succeed in planting theirs this week.

Oats are looking fine.

Sam Knifflin has improved his place by a good fence. Let more do likewise.

E. C. Rauch has received his appointment as postmaster, and now he smiles.

J. P. Beckler is building a fine barn.

The school house is nearly ready for the roof.

The G. A. R. Post will celebrate Memorial Day at Ridgeway cemetery. Let all friends turn out and make it a success. Good music and speakers will be present.

The Britton Band are drilling and seem to make good progress. They furnish the music for Memorial Day.

AN INTERESTING REUNION.

QUARTER-CENTENNIAL GATHERING OF THE OLD PUPILS OF THE CLINTON SCHOOL.

Reunion of the Old Pupils with their Teachers Prof. and Mrs. Williams—The Supper, Literary Exercises, Etc.

Yesterday was a gala day for Clinton. Several weeks ago, a few of the old pupils who attended school under Prof. O. C. Williams, conceived the happy idea of getting up a reunion and reception for Prof. Williams and his old pupils. The project soon took form. Committees were appointed to send invitations, a program of exercises was arranged, and a day fixed for the reunion. Yesterday was the time chosen. At an early hour in the afternoon the visitors began to assemble at the Town hall, and by four o'clock a large crowd had gathered. Tables were spread in the hall and supper was served at five o'clock. The afternoon exercises consisted of a social, supper and the reading of letters of regret from a large number of pupils, who were unable to be present. ADDRESS OF WELCOME.

Kind Teachers, Mr and Mrs. Williams: I esteem it a great privilege as well as a high personal honor to have been chosen by these, my old classmates, and in their behalf to perform this pleasant duty of welcoming you to-night.

It is nearly 25 years ago that in parting you took us each by the hand, and wishing us "God speed," committed us to the active engagements of life.

On that day we stepped forth to mingle with the everchanging current of that shoreless stream of thought, and toil, and hum, and activity, the inheritance of each and all, and to act our parts in the great tragedy which constitutes the sum of human life.

We parted then in the spring time, typical of the new life we were about to enter, and it seems fitting that we should celebrate this, our first, meeting since, in the same beautiful season.

Filled with bright dreams and happy visions of the future—we parted then in life's morning—to-day we meet again in life's afternoon. But during all this period of separation, counted by long years of strife, and anxiety, and pains, and disappointment, mingled somewhat with joy and peace, we have ever held you in kind remembrance, and it is our united hope that time may deal gently with you in the years to come. And as we welcome you to our broken circle to-night, we do so with the same open hearts and hands that welcomed you in the days fled. And now kind teachers, in behalf of these, your old pupils of Clinton, I bid you a thrice hearty welcome.

RESPONSE BY PROF. WILLIAMS.

Dear old friends. I am happy to greet you at this reunion. To you Clinton has ever been home. After nearly a quarter of a century I am permitted to meet you once again. As I look over this audience I see here and there a face that brings back old scenes, and I almost wish that we were back here again as of old. I see that time has pressed heavily upon you too. I see representatives here in all the walks of life, and one by one I see those pupil boys and girls have been taking positions in the world's work. Then too I see blank leaves. Where are those that have gone over the line? We know them still in the homage we pay their memory here to-night.

In order to go to press at the usual time we are compelled to cut short this report at this point, but we shall endeavor to print one or more of the papers read at the meeting in our issue of next week.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

A. G. Burton was very sick last week with neuralgia.

John Brooks, of St. Ignace, Mich., is visiting at his uncle's, David Brook's.

Mr. Abram Glimpse died at his home, three miles east of here last Friday morning. He had been sick for several months, and a great sufferer most of the time, so that death secured to him but a happy release from the burdens of life. The funeral was held at the house, Saturday afternoon, Rev Kerridge was the officiating clergyman.

Huldah Liebelt whose illness we mentioned last week, died last Sunday night. She has been sick for several weeks and last week it was thought that she might recover. But a relapse took place and her constitution was not strong enough to enable her to battle longer with the disease. The funeral services were held at the Episcopal church, Wednesday, at half past nine.

The ex-graduates of Clinton High School met last Saturday and organized The Alumni. A meeting will be held in June, at which time a fine program will be presented. Committees were appointed and all preliminary business transacted.

Frank Fisk and John Vaughn, of Newton, Iowa, arrived in town Monday night. Frank was one of the Clinton "boys" about ten years ago, and many is the hearty hand shake that he receives on his visits here. He has not visited Clinton before in seven years. He left here Wednesday night. Mr. Vaughn will be better remembered by the older portion of the community, and though many years have passed since he was a resident of this place, he is well remembered and heartily welcomed here.

A MARGIN.

Ten thousand dollars is a margin that's doing well.
But let the market drop a point and then there's nothing left.

The trotting saint—how as I thought I met a saint last April date
He's [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible]
[illegible] the mark.

They take the drink, sly regard, and put down cruel to the heart,
And water the heart's blood and slump down
there's no match.

They spread reports and rumors start, lying in the window's chase
But they spread with heavy hearts they see it drop to six.

Faint and sad and sorrowful and hearts half broken
The little lamb behold the stock refused to only five

He says that Wall street is a fraud [illegible]
[illegible]
And thinks he [illegible] with four

Now mad with rage he writes—swears the broker he will sue
The broker shows a quarter since the margin drops to two.

They wait some more—but O, alas—before the day is done
The bears get in their devilish work and down
it drops to one.

Disconsolate he kicks, and says the racket takes the bun.
He's busted that—for word is brought of margin
there is none.

A SOCIAL SURPRISE.

The Evidence Picked Up by a Natural-Born Detective.

Two girls were walking slowly along the elm-shaded street of a country town. Their heads were close together, their rosy faces eager, their tones lowered to the pitch of confident communication.

"Early this morning," the taller of the pair was saying, "I was sitting studying behind the blinds of the front parlor window when Amy Jaynes came hurrying along, and met Clara Williams right by our house.

"I was going to see Fanny before she goes," began Clara.

"Don't stop me," said Amy, out of breath. "We've had an awful time at home, and I'm going for the doctor.

"Then I could not hear anything what she and she spoke so fast. But I made out that somebody had been crushed or scalded at night. He always takes a bottle to bed with him, the poor dear! And again, before mamma awoke, he got up by himself and almost killed herself."

"Do tell," said Clara. "But poor Fanny! Is anything the matter with Fanny? I suppose I'd better go to the house with you." And away they ran.

The narrator paused portentously.

"Well," said the auditor.

"Why," "The repetition was impatient. "Who is the only person in that house who would be likely to drink Lard? Who, indeed, would the family be interested in concealing? But—then! After breakfast I was clearing up my bedroom, when Dr. Sargent and Harry Jaynes walked down the street and stopped at our corner for a few parting words. I slipped down stairs to get a nearer peep at my young gentleman. As I expected, his eyes were red and his face chalky. Now and then he put up his hands to his forehead. The first words I heard were: "I have a headache."

"That's not to be wondered at," said the doctor. "Your mother's ankles worse. I'll warrant. What she wants is a fortnight in the country."

"Harry laughed in a foolish, awkward way.

"This is an unlucky accident—happening just now," he said.

"The doctor put his hand on his shoulder and talked low and seriously for full a minute. Harry never lifted his eyes from the ground. They said, "Good-morning," and the doctor turned around to call out: "They go at half-past eight I suppose?" Harry nodded, and went up the hill toward home.

"Now, Florry Wells, I am going to school by way of the station, to pick up another link of circumstantial evidence."

"Daisy Dorr, you are a natural-born detective! It is genius, not talent, with you."

Daisy smiled modestly.

"It is odd how things drift to me! There is some principle of natural gravitation in it all. I sit still, and fragments of proof are thrown into my lap. The only talent I display is in fitting the mosaic bits together. As you say, it is a gift."

At twenty-five minutes past eight they were at the station, and took their stand in an obscure corner behind a pile of freight. At twenty-six minutes past eight a carriage drove up. Harry Jaynes was on the box with the coachman. He leaped down, opened the door, and helped out his married sister, a nurse and infant. Then Amy stepped to the platform, and turned to give her hand to a lady in widow's mourning, closely veiled. She moved feebly, resting on her son's shoulder in alighting, and leaning on her daughter's arm when Harry hurried off for tickets. Through the dense blackness of the crape veil our detectives could make out that she wore a bandage over the left eye, and their hearts brimmed with horror and pity.

"How pale and sad Amy and her sister look," whispered Daisy. "See him helping his mother into the cars and carrying the baby! He's named for him, too, you know—Harry Jaynes Deane. I should think they would feel like changing that now."

Amy's cheeks were wet with tears as she stood on the platform to wave a farewell at the window from which Baby Harry's face smiled at her. Her brother silently drew her hand into his arm, and led her away. Her pallor and depression were noticed that day at school by others besides the knowing two who were in the possession of the clue. The Principal inquired if she had a headache, and the entire class saw the girl's eyes fill as she replied in the negative. Her bosom-friend and deskmate Clara Williams offered an explanation of her sorrowful aspect at recess, when Amy had gone home.

"Her sister Mrs. Deane started for St. Louis this morning. Amy is devoted to her and the baby. It is a dreadful trial to them all, her living so far away.

"Has Mrs. Jaynes gone to St. Louis, too?" queried Fanny.

Daisy pulled her handkerchief out of her reticule, and Clara looked surprised at the question.

"No. She has not been well for some weeks—a touch of malaria, they think. [illegible] to the country."

Fanny seemed to be relieved the shameful tragedy [illegible] Daisy in [illegible] "How true that one sin leads to another!

Daisy Dorr's suit, Mrs. Wedely, lived [illegible] in the block of her admiration more as she went to and from school. She was neat, childless and quiet people. Daisy dropped in to [illegible] Mrs. Wedely by the same law of attraction that drew them to Daisy. Everybody accounted for it in [illegible] cases. Mr. Wedely was not at home. Hostess and visitor enjoyed their dainty "tea-fixer" the more for his absence.

"I fear there is no room for reasonable doubt as to Harry Jaynes's habits," said Mrs. Wedely, unfeignedly regretful over her fourth cup of tea. "His two years in Germany must have taught him the use of lager beer and light wines. I need not warn you, Daisy, to be careful where and to whom you repeat this story. Of course it is quite safe with me."

Daisy only told her mother and elder sister [illegible] Mrs. Wedely imparted her version of the scandal under the seal of sacred confidence to two very particular friends, [illegible] Yet by Saturday night—Mrs. Jaynes left town on Wednesday morning—the city papers as in the "best [illegible] of the beautiful town of Eastwood were had not caught some whisper of the tragedy enacted in the Jaynes house, were let. Sargent, Harry and Amy Jaynes.

Expressed as much as we may, it is inevitable that enlightenment on such matters comes last to those most nearly concerned.

It was glorious June weather. Blossoms and fragrance sang in the air. Birds ran shouting and swirling over the shaven lawns, of which Eastwood was justly proud, and captured fat slugs and performing earthworms for the kitchen garden. Eastwood could not [illegible] under such skies. Dowagers and maidens tripped along the shady streets and around corners, and popped in at open doors.

Fat slugs and unctious earthworms were dry and insipid fare compared with the tidbits rolled over and under busy tongues. Old residents remembered with loud reluctance that Harry Jaynes's great-grandfather's wine-cellar was noted for the excellence of its liquors. A cousin twice removed had been a tough liver. Harry's father had a temper of his own, although he had died in the odor of sanctity of typhoid fever.

With regard to the nature and extent of the injuries sustained by the mother, opinions varied, and widely. According to some the scalp was laid open across the forehead down to the bone. But the latter was not injured. The attendants to this fact had the support of eye-witnesses of the transaction in its latter stages.

The naked truth was hideous enough. Young Jaynes had returned home from the city at two o'clock p. m. Respectable citizens recalled how they had heard "with their own ears," the "owl train." He was partially intoxicated and brought liquor home with him. A policeman had met him near the station carrying a heavy valise, and could swear to his identity. In point of fact, words were exchanged between them. The policeman said, "Good-evening, Mr. Jaynes!" and the reprobate responded, thickly, "Good-morning, Mr. Johnson!"

He admitted himself with his latch-key, and found his devoted (and widowed) parent sitting up for him. She always spoiled him from a boy. She had hot coffee ready. They do say oysters, also, but on this head evidence was not strong. Let us be accurate, at the loss of dramatic effect. He said that he preferred brandy and water, and ate nothing, reeling off to his room without thanking her for her goodness.

Left to himself, he smoked and guzzled until daylight. By this time he was crazy with drink taken on an empty stomach. His mother's room adjoined his. When he crept stealthily into her apartment, she was sleeping heavily, having waited for hours, poor thing! He poked up a full brandy-bottle as he staggered in, and beat her over the head with it.

Amy was sleeping with her mother, and alarmed the house. Dr. Sargent was sent for. Amy ran for him herself, putting on her dress as she went. He sewed up the gashes, and packed Mrs. Jaynes off to a country relative, and Mrs. Deane went along to take care of her. Although still in a critical condition, inflammation having supervened upon concussion of the brain, the unhappy lady would probably rally in time.

This simple, ungarbled statement covered the whole ground. Christian charity dictates that we should turn a deaf ear to exaggerations and intemperate charges where character is at stake.

Harry Jaynes attended the choir-rehearsal in the Second Church on Saturday evening. He was solemn, undoubtedly, and sang well on Sunday, admirably—a full, sweet tenor that brought the tears to the eyes of three old ladies and thirteen young ones. The elderly women averred that they thought of his poor dear mother. The girls were moved with disinterested pity for the misguided youth whose handsome face harmonized so well with his angel-voice, and not at all with his depraved nature.

"Has it struck you that our esteemed townspeople stare more than usual today?" asked Harry, as he joined his sister in the church porch. "What is amiss in my appearance?"

"You are a trifle better-looking than you are even on week-days, Sir Vanity," rejoined Amy, with a fond glance. "It is I who am the subject of remark, I think. I have not felt like myself since Wednesday morning."

Poor Harry walking some paces in advance, heard the last sentence and the slight quiver in the tone. She caught the beginning of the reply.

"But it is a good one, Amy! Such things will happen in the best regulated families."

Young Jaynes's evening lounge took him past some of the earliest gossips, within hearing of the feet of their eager [illegible]

"Did you not [illegible] I wish you [illegible] that Harry lived a thousand miles away. But when the marriage came from the other side of the [illegible] I [illegible] than [illegible]

By Monday morning, Monday, grave faces were [illegible] and more grave [illegible] Town [illegible] with suspicion and distrust. Two married ladies, and emphatically [illegible] Monday morning, Amy, without a [illegible] Four single ones [illegible] to stay and sewer.

"There's something wrong somewhere," the young people agreed to one another. Amy added, "I have been painfully conscious of a change in the behavior of the school girls for a week past. Some are offish—others pitying."

On the next Sabbath Mrs. Jaynes' much face was seen in its wonted place in the family pew. Half-seen, only—for the crape veil hung in double folds on the left side. It must have been pinned firmly in place, for it did not stir during the service, and while many wanted to speak to her in the vestibule, nobody obtained a glimpse of her left eye and temple.

Excitement mounted to fever heat. Conjecture, assertion, condemnation, corroborated and rebutted each other, and ran to a climax by Thursday afternoon. For at that time the Charitable Society was to meet with Mrs. Jaynes, it being her turn in the regular progression of the movable feast.

Such a turn-out of young, middle-aged and old to a church "ordinance" had never been known before in the parish.

Mrs. Jaynes distributed the work among the guests.

"It is very good in you young ladies to come out in such force," she said. "I am thankful that I did not yield to foolish shame and get some one else to take the meeting to-day."

She raised her hand, coloring and laughing, to touch the strip of flesh-colored court-plaster that had riveted every eye the moment she presented herself below stairs.

"Harry and Amy insist that I am quite presentable. I suppose that I am too vain for an old woman. But I was mortified at the accident and very willing to bury myself in the country until my wound healed. I charged Amy not to let the story leak out before I got back. I did not relish the fancy of being laughed at behind my back, and may be seeing 'A Singular Accident' described in the Eastwood Trumpet. But it was the most absurd affair altogether."

She laughed again. Amy chimed in from her low seat in the hall.

"Tell them the whole of the tragical story, mamma," urged the daughter. "You needn't mind it now."

Nothing loth to break up the stiffness of the company, Mrs. Jaynes began amid stillness that allowed her every word to be heard in every corner of every room.

"I insisted that Baby Harry's crib should be brought into my room the night before Fanny's departure. My heart is bound up in that baby.

"My big Harry was expected by the two o'clock train, and partly between missing of Fanny's and baby's going, and his coming, I did not sleep a wink until the dear, thoughtful fellow looked into my room to let me know that he was safe and sound at home. Then I filled baby's bottle and left it by him on the pillow, and dropped asleep, quite wearied out. Baby awoke at six, drank the milk, crawled over into my bed, and aroused me by a whack on my eyebrow that broke the bottle and left a bit of glass in the flesh. I would not have believed that he could strike so hard.

"The blood flowed in torrents. Baby screamed, and so did I. Harry rushed in from one side, Amy and Fanny from another. My trunk was packed for my country trip, and Fanny was to spend a night and day with me at my sister's. But Amy and her brother, like two foolish children, would call in Dr. Sargent to make sure that no glass was left in the cut."

There was an embarrassing silence as she ceased. Nine-and-thirty women, with bent heads and flushed cheeks, were sewing as if for life and reputation.

Amy looked around in surprise and chagrin.

"Mamma, they don't find it half as amusing as it appears to us!"—Marion Harland, in Youth's Companion.

Wants a Fresh Dictionary.

The editor sat sadly at his desk. His mouth was puckered with the expression a man assumes when he tries to cut a tough piece of meat with a silver pie knife. His cheeks were distended on one side by a chew of tobacco, on the other by a mouthful of Asiatic words.

"A-f af—g-a-n gan no, g-a-h-n—hang it! g-h-a-n! Afghanistan. James!"

"Yessir."

"Run up to the house and tell my wife to send Tommy down with his geography the minute he gets home from school."

"All right, sir."

"Let me see. How had I best advise Gladstone? I wonder whether Murgha is a man or a place. But it's getting late, so here goes."

To the thoughtful student of international politics the recent action of Gladstone can not but appear weak in the extreme. If he had ordered the troops to attack Rawil-Pisede instead of waiting for General Kushk on the banks of the Komaroff a great advantage to England would certainly have followed, and Sarakhs, as far as Kohn Dilain was concerned, would——

"Yessir."

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs; none so to be dreaded, and so fatal when neglected by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has proved its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.—"In 1[illegible] I took a severe cold which settled on my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and for [illegible] nights I did not expect to live to see morning. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, [illegible] and allowed me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. I have continued use of the PECTORAL as a family medicine ever since, and, on the slightest cold, have not hesitated to give your CHERRY PECTORAL relief."—HENRY F. ROTHER, Rockingham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken down with croup. It seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried, and, in small and frequent doses, and to our delight, it [illegible] the little patient within twenty minutes. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved his life. Can you wonder at our gratitude?"—MRS. EMMA CURRY, 159 West 125th St., New York, May 19, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the best of medicinal remedies for coughs and colds we have ever tried."—A. J. CRANE, Lake Crystal, Minn., March 13, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL."—JOSIAH WALDEN, Belmont, Miss., April 5, 1882.

"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It seems to me it saves my life as I do that my family are healthy. I should long since have died from night sweats and L. BRAGDON," Paris, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

THE COMMERCIAL TRAVELER.

A Drummer Who Was Not the Gay and Festive Creature He is Usually Thought to Be.

He was a traveling-man. That fact was conveyed to the other passengers on the train by his good clothes and comfortable air of well-to-do-ativeness as well as by his general bearing of being accustomed to luxuries. He had the best fare at the best hotels, and his employer's money paid for it as an investment that would return sure dividends. For the rest, he was absent from his family nearly all the time, traveling night and day in close, hot, ill-ventilated cars, worked like a machine at every town on his route, and earned a better salary than any professional man of his acquaintance. He was the first to make up a purse for a widow or stranded fellow-traveler, and when he read the newspaper stories of the gay and festive drummer he wondered why in the course of his travels he never met any of the craft. The men he knew were, like himself, of honorable record, often inconveniencing themselves to help one another on the way through.

There was a stir at a station, and two pretty girls came aboard. They laughed and giggled; threw kisses to their friends at the depot; gave silly messages and good-byes, and, as the train started, they took a seat behind the commercial traveler. There were other seats vacant, but they preferred this, and rustled into it with a series of little shrieks and giggles.

"Did you see Tom Barlow watching us, Nellie? Te-he-he."

"He'll be there to meet us when we go back, see if he isn't, Kittie! Ha! ha!"

"Say, he's a drummer," giggled Nellie, hunching her friend toward the front seat.

"Too awfully swell, ain't he? Oh, my!"

The traveler did not make any answer. His silk hat, as fine and pretentious as the hat of a man who does his duty and owes no man anything has a right to be, was pulled down over his eyes; his lips were compressed, and he replied by no look or motion to the rude speech of the merry girls.

"Must be awfully stuck up," whispered Nellie, but not so low but that the man on the seat before her could hear distinctly.

"Doesn't notice common people," answered Kittie, with a toss of her head.

These were young ladies, dear readers. Not hobble-de-hoy school-girls or coarse, ill-bred hoydens. They moved in the best society, and their respective fathers and mothers would have been greatly astonished to learn that their daughters flirted. But then, fathers and mothers are usually the last to know what is going on among their own young people.

"W-would you be so kind, sir, as to tell us what time it is?" asked Nellie, in a little, meek, far-away voice, while her companion tittered and looked out of the window.

Both the young ladies wore watches, as was patent to an observer, but the gentleman addressed could do nothing less than answer so direct a question. This he did in a brief manner, and with a voice that noticeably trembled.

"Poor thing, he was quite overcome," whispered Kittie, audibly. "I'm going to want this window put up pretty soon."

"Allow me," said the traveling man respectfully, and the disconcerted young lady blushed and simpered, and sat in the draught without protest.

The next move was made by the gentleman. He took from his pocket a photograph and inspected it long and sadly. Tears welled into his eyes, his face flushed, and he returned it to his pocket.

The two young ladies did not see the photograph, at least not to recognize whether it was man or woman, but they te-he'd and simpered and even speculated in a low voice as to who it might be—wife or sweetheart.

"Don't tell me he's married," cried Kittie in a loud whisper. He hasn't the courage to pop the question."

"That was his grandmother's picture," chimed in Nellie. "Good boy! carries it with him so that the old lady will hear of it and leave him something in her will."

Then they giggled in chorus, and the train drew up at a station where some very anxious looking faces were pressing forward as if in search of some one.

The commercial traveler caught up his satchel and slung it over his shoulder; then he took the photograph he had been looking at out of his pocket, and turned to the two young ladies who began to feel a little uncomfortable at his manner.

"That is the picture of my little daughter," he said, holding up the counterfeit of a lovely, smiling child of six years; "she is very ill, and I am summoned home, perhaps to see her die. But let me tell you that I would rather a thousand times know, at this moment, that the breath of life had forever passed her sweet lips, than to think she could ever grow up into a silly, dishonest woman, tempting and toying with souls to feed her on wicked vanity."

Almost the next moment they saw him on the platform, and a fair woman hung on his arm, and his face lighted with pleasure at her words. But the two sank back out of sight, enraged, mortified, yet conscious that they had found, in one traveling man, an honest-minded friend who had dared to give them a word of needful warning.—Mrs. Maune, in Detroit Free Press.

—Maine papers say that a Bath boarding mistress surprised one of her boarders, who was learning to play on the banjo, by reducing the price of his board on the ground that his singing and playing had frightened away all the rats. The compliment discouraged the young man so much that he has given up practice.

—The United States Consulate at Nogales, Sonora, Mexico, is without a flag. This is probably the only case on record where a branch of the United States Consular Department is not represented by the National ensign.—Chicago Times.

Brought Home a Wagon.

Louisville, Ky.—Mr. J. Helmus, Vice President of the City Brewery, was brought home in a wagon, carried up two pair of stairs by two of his men and laid on the bed. He was suffering with a severe attack of rheumatism contracted in the ice vaults of the brewery. He refused to have a doctor, but dispatched a servant for a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, with the result that in one week he was entirely cured and able to return to his desk.

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease; Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood if pure makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

A Sad Death.

In Piladelphia recently at the coroner's inquest over the body of a child, the jury returned a verdict that death was caused by the administration of a patent cough syrup, containing morphia. Dr. Sam'l K. Cox, of Washington, states that not one cough medicine in ten is free from this objection. After careful analyses and practical tests he endorses Red Star Cough Cure as being purely vegetable, absolutely free from opiates, poisons and narcotics. He regards it a most happy and valuable discovery.

Wash as you please, and it will make you its friend. Soak, boil and don't rub; or soak, rub and don't boil. We advocate dispensing, so far as possible with the washboard, because it wears the clothes out and wears you out. The soap contains no mineral to give it weight, and no pulp to give it size; therefore frequent boiling will not yellow or injure the clothes, but soaking and boiling with ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP does clean and disinfect them. One thing is certain; it produces glorious results, is an economical soap and is so pure and harmless that the writer washes his head with it without injuring a hair, and he isn't bald either. ANNUAL SERMON TO THE G. A. R.

The Special Services at the Baptist Church last Sunday and Sermon by Rev. C. E. Conley

In accordance with a custom heretofore established the G. A. R. Post held a special religious service this year on the Sabbath prior to Decoration Day. The sermon was delivered by Rev C. E. Conley and the services were held in the Baptist Church at three o'clock P. M. Beer's Post and Co. C. attended in a body. The music was very appropriate and added much to the interest of the occasion. A few floral pieces of exquisite beauty ornamented the rostrum. In addition to the formal religious services by the pastor, a brief special service was given by the Post in commemoration of Harris McDaniel, recently deceased, who was a respected member of Beer's Post. Remarks were made by Commander S. P. Hosmer and Comrade A. W. Mills, who was a member of the same company with Mr. McDaniel in the army, Co. G. 11th Cavalry. The church was filled and the entire exercises were appropriate and impressive. We append a full report of Mr. Conley's sermon and the addresses made by Messrs. Hosmer & Mills. They all merit a careful perusal.

OUR DUTY TO COUNTRY AND TO GOD.

Mat. 22:21.—"Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

INTRODUCTORY.

This is an occasion of sweet solemnity and of chastened sadness. Our thoughts involuntarily turn back to years of sanguinary strife. For the hour we live over again those terrific battle summers, which filled our land with woe and crowned our flag with victory.

Those who wore the blue recall the toilsome march, the hospital with its pain and loneliness and the field with its peril and its blood.

Those who remained at home could not, if they would, would not, if they could, forget those awful years of waiting, of burning solicitude for our cause and of heart-breaking anxiety for the freemen soldiery that went from our homes to do battle for the right.

Who can ever forget how the heart stopped its beating, when on the wings of lightning came the news that a battle was in progress? Who can forget the agonizing prayer, the strong crying that went up to the God of battles during the awful hours and days of suspense that followed—pleading with Him to give victory to the Banner of the Free, and to save alive our loved ones, who for its sake bared their breasts to the iron storm!

Then came the news of victory, sometimes of defeat; and then, the published lists of the killed and wounded. How frantically we tore open the papers and with blanched countenances and trembling fingers we run down the heroic list until we found the regiment of our loved one, his company, his name, "killed in battle" or "mortally wounded."

The generation that has sprung up since, cannot conceive the agony of those terrific years, but God knew it and pitied us. To-day in vivid imagination and loving memory we wander among the graves of the "silent host", and mourn. They are in the National cemeteries, where they were laid with gentle hands in the midst of military honors; on the field, where they fell, and where over them this hour peaceful industry thrives; in the bosom of our rivers and seas, waiting for the great reveille, when the sea shall shall give up its dead, and in the quiet "God's Acres" all over the great North and East and West

"Our Father's eternal camping ground,
Their silent tents are spread;
And glory guards with solemn sound
The bivouac of the dead."

The gratitude and love of a redeemed and blood cemented people is appropriately but faintly expressed in the consecration of the 30th of May as the time for the decoration of their graves with flowers. It is a custom of classic beauty and is the sweet symbol of Christian gratitude. The beauty of the flowers is an emblem of the beauty of the unselfish devotion of the Union volunteer, whether living or dead, their fragrance, an emblem of the fragrance of their sacrifice for human equality and human rights, and the universal freshness of the budding year expresses the freshness of their memory, which dwells immortal in the hearts of a greatful nation.

The occasion with all it commemorates, is deeply significant. It tells of patriotism; of that love of country, which is deeper and stronger than all other loves, the Christian's love for his God alone excepted. It reveals a bulwark of our national life, compared with which material defences are nothing. A heroine of Poland, approached by officers of the government that was oppressing her country, with the demand for information as to the whereabouts of her soldier husband, replied: "he is in my heart, where you cannot get him, while I live." American laws and principles of human freedom and equality are written on paper, it is true; but they are also written in the hearts of fifty million of loyal freemen where they cannot be reached by their enemies, while we live. To destroy them, ourselves must first be destroyed.

This loyalty is in accordance with the teachings and spirit of the Son of God. He was a Jew and was a model patriot. He loved his people and their heaven born laws and institutions; his life was spent in their service and his death was for their redemption. He was loyal to the magistrate, as evinced in our text. "Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's."

Again and again did the Spirit of inspiration, whose mission is to speak of him and to glorify him, enjoin this duty upon his followers throughout the world.

To the Church in Rome the great Apostle was moved to write: "Let every soul be subject unto higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation." Rom. 13:1,2.

To Titus, whose work was to teach God's people the principles of the New Testament, he gave instruction to "put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work." Tit. 3:1, and the same spirit moved Peter, whose epistle is directed to the strangers scattered throughout the nations, to write: "submit yourselves to every ordinance of man," not in conflict with the law of God, "for the Lord's sake, whether it be to the King, as supreme, or unto governors." 1 Pet. 2:13.

An intelligent, conscientious love of country is a holy love, and holy was that patriot's devotion that led our freemen soldiery to die upon American battlefields for the majesty of American law, for the perpetuation of American institutions and for the freedom of American citizens irrespective of color.

A year and a half ago a wild tumult broke out in Cincinnati. An ill-timed and intemperate protest was made against flagrant miscarriages of justice in that city. It was like dropping a match upon the dried prairie and throwing a brand into shavings. A great conflagration of human passion ran through the inflammable spirits with which the city was filled. And the Paris of America was filled with scenes like these, that characterized the Paris of France in the days of the terrible commune. This was the breaking forth of a blind impulse, an ebulition of brute fury. In some instances those fierce spirits performed prodigies of valor, but fell, as they fought, like dogs. It is needless to remark that such is not the spirit of patriotism. It is a rational emotion. The patriot is inspired by lofty principles. He feels in his breast the thrill that is born of love of truth and right and hatred of wrong and oppression. It is not partizanship; it is the deathless devotion of the martyr.

There may have been men, who rushed to arms in '61 and '62, animated by the spirit of the mobs of Cincinnati. Doubtless there were. But we are ready to believe that their numbers were few compared with that almost countless host that everywhere confronted rebellion from sea to sea. By far the great majority of them were roused and made invincible by clear and profound convictions. As clearly as we see the sun in an unclouded sky, they saw that to purchase peace at the price of disunion was to entail an endless border warfare upon coming generations; and that to tamely grant the arrogant demands of shameless rebellion was to open the gates to a condition of affairs such as exists to-day, and for centuries has existed, in Europe. The statesmanship of both the Northern and Southern unions would have been forever taxed to its utmost to preserve that delicate balance of power, which every time it became disturbed, would hurl both nations against each other in the shock of war. The spirit of rebellion was a cancer, which, if allowed to grow, would forever destroy American freedom and American security. And the brave spirits of '61 nobly resolved to cut it out with the sword, fully realizing that to save their lives would be to lose them. Under the power of this conviction, as deep as their hearts, they rallied from the East, the North and the West and marched with firm and ready step to the scene of conflict. Fearlessly did they battle, nobly did they fall and majestically did they conquer. They fought for peace and won it. From henceforth, let us hope we are secure from the rude alarms of war. Our homes both North and South are secure, and the entire nation is left in the undisturbed pursuits of peace.

But it must not be forgotten, that many patriots of a quarter of a century ago were stirred by a profounder, nobler sentiment than the one we have just considered. They had come into deathless sympathy with a great doctrine, which Paul had enunciated on Mars' Hill, that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men." (Acts 17:26.) In this fact they found the divine warrant for that world renowned statement in the Declaration of Independence, "All men are created free and equal." They are equal before the tribunal of God, and, in the estimation of those lofty spirits, they should be equal before the tribunals of men. And in the fettered slave they saw a flagrant violation of a fundamental principle of human nature and a willful disregard of the law of God. They had plead the cause of the oppressed only to be spurned. They had tried moral suasion and had failed. They had forborn until forbearance ceased to be a virtue. If rebellion was a cancer, slavery was the root that fed it life. Nothing was left them, but an appeal to the God of Armies and a resort to arms. To them the struggle was in the name of a dishonored God and an outraged humanity. A grander moral issue never enlisted heroes, and grander heroes never championed a moral issue. This, if I mistake not, constituted the supreme grandeur of our civil war, and the freedom of the slave was the brightest laural won in our dearly bought victory. Such is patriotism. And what a divine sentiment it is! How noble, how almost Christ like, is the patriot. To give Cæsar his due is worthy of the saintliest ambition.

One of the most powerful incentives to noble action is the contemplation of noble examples. The memory of the self-forgetting devotion of Washington constitutes a bond of union, more effectual and more enduring than that of the most serious laws. It is said that soldiers of both union and confederate armies would sometimes meet upon the sacred soil of Mt. Vernon, but never with arms in their hands. Side by side with uncovered heads, would they stand in the presence of that marble sarcophagus, in which repose the ashes of the Father of their common country. Both felt the silent pleadings of that historic tomb. In that sacred presence the fierceness and passion of battle faded out of their hearts, and in their stead came the tenderness of a common brotherhood.

Of Abel more than four thousand years after his death the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews declared "he being dead yet speaketh." Heb. 11:4. The same is true of the noble dead in whose memory we gather to-day. Their noble example inspires us with the spirit of emulation. They loved country, so will we. They gave themselves for its life, so would we. These graves of our brethren make brethren of us all. In the hearts of their comrades, who so appropriately lead in these memorial exercises, glow the fires of nearly a quarter of a century ago with undiminished brightness. In the hearts of the generation, who know of the war as a matter of history only, comes the feeling of a solemn responsibility to protect that which the "fallen host" so nobly saved. The patriot father performs no more patriotic duty than when he leads his child to the garlanded mounds in yonder cemetery and recounts to it the noble deeds of the heroic dead. He is educating a patriot, and inspiring a young heart with the spirit of heroism. If properly educated, it will be a hero in the midst of "the pomp and circumstance of war" not only, but also in the midst of the quietude and less obtrusive influences of peace.

A storm is the result of silent forces that operate while the sun is shining. They gather while the birds sing, the grass grows and the brooks babble. Suddenly the sky is over clouded, the air moves in fitful breathings, the lightnings gleam, the thunders mutter and men look up to find that the storm has broken upon them in all of its desolating fury. The Spirit of the air holds high carnival in the midst, not infrequently, of fearful destruction of property and life.

Similar is the origin of the causes of war. It finds its beginnings in the quiet hours of peace. The forces of wrong, though unseen, are active. With the swiftness and malignity of dark spirits they hurry to and fro towards the accomplishment of their sanguinary result. When all is ripe they start an unsuspecting people from their repose to all the horrors of strife. The true patriot is watchful. He is a close observer of the signs of the times. He is on the lookout for the silent forces that work towards the dread result. He hates wrong both for what it is and what it will do. He has the courage of his convictions, and consequently is the open and relentless antagonist of everything that will destroy a righteous peace.

Such patriotism is invaluable. It seeks the triumph of right without the fearful cost entailed by war. It is humanitarian to the last degree. For this reason the admiration of the best and the truest is elicited by the premier of Great Britain to day. Pledged for the honor, of his country, deeply in love with the cause of humanity he will appeal to arms as a last resort only. Firm against the encroachments of Russia, unswerved by the tumultous demands for war of the fiery spirits of his own nation, he stands in all the majestic poise of a great brain and a great heart. History scarcely records a sublimer man, a grander, truer patriot.

His is the spirit of the Testament: first pure then peaceable; and peaceable until it is impossible to be pure without war.

In a government like ours, which is of the people, for the people and by the people, "it is the sacred duty of every citizen to be conscientious and vigilant; to be clear in his convictions and fearless in his advocacy of them, and to jealously guard freedom of speech, and freedom of political action for himself and for his opponent as well. In no other way can we render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's.

We must not close without calling attention to the last part of our text, "And render unto God the things that are God's."

While we must be loyal to our country, we must be supremely loyal to our God. This is his due. To be disloyal to our government is to incur guilt. Infinitely more so, is it to be disloyal to God. Our government lays claim to our service by virtue of its right as a protector: our God by virtue of his right as protector and creator. We love our country because it is the refuge of the oppressed. God is the refuge and strength of all people of all nations for time and eternity. Our country has glory; but it is but the reflected glory of Him, who inhabiteth eternity. Our civil war was a battle for the right; but it was but a single struggle in the prolonged conflict waged by the eternal against the wrong ever since the shameful fall in Eden, and which he will continue to wage until wrong is forever banished from the earth. Certainly we owe him the unbroken loyalty of our bodies and our spirits, which are His.

In the blood of our fallen heroes we find a powerful motive to live for our flag and for the land they redeemed. In the blood of Calvary we find infinite incentive to love him who by it would redeem us all.

It is said that a great chasm opened in the form of Ancient Rome. The soothsayers said it could not be closed except by that which was most valuable to the state. To avert the danger which threatened his fellow citizens, Marcus Curtius, an eminent soldier, mounted his horse, full armed, and rode into the abyss, which immediately closed over him. There was an impassable gulf made by our own disloyalty, between us all and God to whom we owe an endless debt of obligation. The only begotten Son of God bridged it with his own body, proffering a salvation to all, who will accept it, infinitely greater than the salvation Curtius proffered Rome. If the gratitude and love of Romans were due to the great Curtius, how much more is our love and gratitude due to the great Saviour!

On one of the battle fields of Virginia lay an Indiana soldier boy, wounded and bleeding in the midst of the battle. A comrade stooped to give him drink from his canteen. Just then a squadron of cavalry dashed by bearing the old flag. Pushing the comrade away he faintly exclaimed, "Follow that Flag." He chose to die, and to die alone rather than to see it fall. Many of you have felt the same deathless devotion to the flag in the hour of battle. It was grandly heroic. But just such devotion you and I owe to the Son of God. He died for us. We ought to be ready to die for him.

REMARKS OF COMMANDER HOSMER.

Since our Post was organized we have been called upon to mourn the loss of two comrades. Our Quarter-Master has balanced our account with comrade Harris McDaniel by the word Dead. The Adjutant has engrossed on the records of the Post, Dead. The vacant chair is draped in mourning, our charter hang with black. We are here assembled to pay homage to him who has answered the retreat call and has gone to that silent camping ground to dwell ever in tents of green, the doors of which never outswing. The name of Harris McDaniel has been handed to the Adjt. of the Supreme Grand Encampment, who has added it to that silent corps who await our coming on the parade ground of eternity. Should the question be asked of him, "How is it with Beer's Post?" he can say all present are accounted for. One by one our ranks are thinned and we sincerely mourn the loss of those whose friendship has been sealed in the fire of battle. Comrades, salute the dead.

REMARKS OF COMRADE A. W. MILLS.

Friends and Comrades of the late Harris McDaniel. I am requested to say a few words giving some incidents in the military life of the deceased.

Harris McDaniel enlisted in the service of the United States, on Oct. 19th 1863, and became a member of Co. G. 11th Mich. Volunteer Cavalry. In July 1865 his regiment, having been reduced in numbers, by death and discharge to less than 300 men, was consolidated with the 8th Mich. Cavalry and our comrade became a member of Co. B., 8th Mich. Volunteer Cavalry, from which at the close of the war he was honorably discharged Sept. 27th, 1865. He became a member of Beer's Post Grand Army of the Republic, Sept. 5th, 1884 and on Thursday, May 14th, 1885, he became a member of the great army across the dark river. It was my fortune to be a member of the same company and I remember on a number of occasions when the company were preparing to make a sabre charge on the enemy, he, on his own accord, took his place near the head of the company, and thus was among those to first meet the enemy and be in the greatest danger. These actions and other similar ones, proved him to be a brave soldier, and, so far as I know he was ever ready to perform his full duty. Loyal to the flag. Loyal to his country. In his death one more of those, who were willing to give their lives, if need be that our Republic might live and our flag defended from dishonor, has joined the army of the majority. For carefully compiled statistics show that during the twenty years since we left the tented field over half of all those who were discharged from the volunteer army have closed their eyes in eternal sleep upon the nation and country they fought to save. The same statistics also prove that in accordance with the well known natural laws, at the end of another twenty years only one of each 1000 men who served in the volunteer army will be living. The Grand Army of the Republic is a peculiar organization. It is made up entirely of old union soldiers and none but honorably discharged ones can be admitted.

Some time since I read an article stating that at the close of the Mexican war a company which had been 100 strong had lost by wound and disease until there were but 25 to receive their discharge. They passed a resolution that on a certain day each year they would meet, as long as they lived. They kept their resolve. Every year 25 chairs were arranged around a table, and nearly every time they met there would be some extra vacant ones, until last year, but one of these 25 men was left. So it is with our Grand Army of the Republic. When all the old soldiers shall have joined it our numbers will begin to decrease and each year more and more rapidly. When a comrade falls by the way there is a vacancy. That vacancy can not be supplied. We have no material from which to draw. Hence, to-day, in our Post room, stands a vacant chair draped with the emblems of mourning. Hence to the memory of Harris McDaniel, as well as to the memory of many other worthy comrades who have gone before, have we draped our flag and are we gathered here to-day.

COUNTY TEACHER'S ASSOCIATION.

The meeting of the county teachers' association, which took place in this city last Saturday, did not regularly open its programme until 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The meeting was conducted in the high school room, and was opened by a paper on "Discipline in District Schools," read by Prof. H. C. Wilson, of Blissfield. The paper was very interesting, and was heard with much attention.

J. B. Tenbrook, of Fairfield, read an intelligent and instructive paper on "Penmanship in district schools," by which he showed that he had "been there," and comprehended the difficulties which attend the work of the country pedagogue.

The third paper on the list was read by W. E. Tripp, of Weston, his subject being "The teacher: His labor and reward." The Tripp family embraces a number of the best teachers in the county, and the amount of solid food for reflection, which the paper contained, went to prove that its author was, by no means, a discredit to his relatives.

The various papers were exhaustively discussed by Messrs. Bird, Tripp, Wilson, and Underwood, and Misses Rogers and Hoag. A quartette by the high school choir, and a solo by Miss Lena Holmes, added much to the pleasure of the exercises.—Adrian Times.

THE LAST ENTERTAINMENT.

The sixth and last entertainment of the Library Lecture Course will be given by Stuart Rogers, the celebrated impersonator, on Friday evening of next week, June 5th. As an impersonator, Mr. Rogers is among the best artists now upon the platform, and as Tecumseh people have never before had an opportunity of listening to him, he will undoubtedly be greeted with a large audience. Season tickets will be good for this entertainment.

A FEW POINTERS.

Mr. Rogers has the faculty of making his audience laugh or cry seemingly at his will.

Mr. Rogers' wonderful versatality and the naturalness of his delineations have won for him, from the press, the title of "The Actor of the Platform."

Mr. Rogers makes all of the changes from one character to another instantaneously, and in the presence of the audience.

Mr. Rogers allows no obstacle within his control to prevent him from keeping his engagements. His record in this respect is remarkable.

PRESS COMMENTS.

The entertainment in the Mechanics' Course last night was given by Stuart Rogers, whose great reputation as a reciter and an impersonator has reached this city, though he has never been heard here before. Mr. Rogers was effective in the character sketches and very amusing in the humorous scenes, keeping the audience in great good humor. He will be very cordially greeted here should he come again, which we hope he will.—Worcester (Mass.) Spy.

Mr. Rogers is devoid of that abominable pompousness, with which so many present themselves before an audience. He announces his subject quietly, and then throws all his powers into the recitation or sketch he presents. The impersonation of "Oscar Wilde" was the hit of the evening.—Petersburg (Va.) Index.

In all of his impersonations, Mr. Rogers displayed great tact and skill, a prominent and interesting feature being the almost wonderful change of facial expression, rendering difficult characters distinctly recognizable by the simple appearance of the speaker.—Elmira (N. Y.) Advertiser.

Stuart Rogers, the recitationist and impersonator, delighted a crowded audience in Association Hall last evening. His specialties are such as call for the highest order of talent in elocution and mimicry, and he is certainly a rare genius upon the platform.—Reading (Pa.) Times and Dispatch.

Adrian Record: A Petersburg frog is said to have fallen into a pail of milk on a recent night and next morning was found complacently seated on a roll of butter which he had churned in his fruitless efforts to get out. We don't believe it. Petersburg is the same town where the Petersburg Journal is published.

Adrian Times: If it will be an accommodation to a brother newspaper man, we might say that the editor of the Tecumseh HERALD has a sewing machine for sale. As the gentleman is a bachelor, we are obliged to wonder how he came into the possession of the article. "Scove" is too thorough a gentleman to seize a lady's right bower in payment for subscription or job work.

Adrian Press: One of our subscribers calls attention to the fact that the pesky crow is creating immense damage all over the country by killing other birds and destroying their nests. He says that the towns will have to offer bounties for the crow, as they are going to do more harm than woodchucks. If the crows would come to the city and tackle the abominable English sparrow, we should feel like overlooking many harsh things now laid up against that bird.

The wool market will soon open.

Fred Quine, of Toledo, was in town last Sunday.

"The village council of Morenci, has donated a fine cemetery lot to the G. A. R. Post, in that village, an act that deserves to be commended, and an example that we would like to see followed elsewhere.

The Common Council voted at the last meeting to buy additional ground adjoining the village building and to enlarge the latter, to build a new barn and to construct a large storage cistern for water. This is a move in the right direction. For particulars see the Council Proceedings.

The executive committee of the Southeastern Soldiers and Sailors Association met on Tuesday, at the Lawrence Hotel, to arrange for the annual encampment. Devils Lake was selected as the place for the encampment, which will begin August 26th and last three days. The association embraces Lenawee, Hillsdale, Washtenaw, Monroe and Branch Counties.

Adrian Record: Remarked the minister of the Free Baptist church of Clayton to the Sabbath School class last Sunday: "Is it right to pray for our rulers?" "Yes," responded David Pontius, an old democrat, "and it used to be the custom of the ministers here, but I have'nt heard a prayer offered for Cleveland since his inauguration." The good shepherd grew crimson in the face and admitted that possibly that duty had been neglected.

It is understood that the syndicate backing the proposed consolidation of the Columbus, Hocking & Toledo and Ohio Central railroad, intends to purchase a controlling interest in the Michigan & Ohio road, which would give them a direct communication with Lake Michigan ports. The line of the Ohio Central from Corning to Charleston, W. Va., will also be purchased, and made part of the system. In the event of this consolidation, the general offices will be in Toledo.

We regret to learn that Thomas W. Mosher, the veteran merchant of Springville, has made an assignment. About a year ago he incurred a large indebtedness in making necessary repairs upon the "Lake Mills" property. This fact with the dull times of the past twelve months has probably forced the assignment. No one who knows him will attribute any dishonesty to him. It is sincerely to be hoped that he will be able to extricate himself and resume business again.

Adrian Record: Tecumseh newspapers assert that James Clark recently caught a 4½ pound eel in the Red Mill pond in Tecumseh. We cannot help feeling that the weight given is a good eel to high. We do not wish to characterize the statement as untrue, but we will say that we believe it is a lie.

A 4½ pound eel is a good deal of an eel, we admit, but the statement is undoubtedly true. In the first place the Red Mill pond grows big eels, in the second place James Clark would not fool away his time catching small eels, and in the third place the Tecumseh newspapers tell the truth.

The Lenawee county Pomona Grange met with the Adrian Grange on the 14th inst., and, as usual, had a very interesting time. Mrs. A. J. Sutton, of Morenci, responded to the address of welcome which was given; and then followed a pleasing, profitable program of recitations, dialogues, music, and discussion. Appreciative resolutions upon the death of several worthy members, including I. R. Phelps, were adopted. The meeting was adjourned to Thursday, Aug. 13, at Macon Grange.

The great National camp meeting, which is to be held at Lansing June 13 to 21 under the auspices of the Methodists, promises to be a greater affair than last year when eighteen srates were represented. W. T. Eccles, of this village, has perfected arrangements for going into the tea business on an extensive scale. He buys his teas direct from New York brokers in large lots at wholesale prices and can retail them at lower figures than were ever before offered in this vicinity. He is now filling up his store with a large stock. His establishment will be known hereafter as the "New York Tea Store."—In addition to his local trade he will send out a man or two on the road to take orders among the farmers for his teas. Mr. Eccles is one of our best young business men and the farmers can rely upon honorable dealing in all their transactions with him.

Miss J. A. Hough has been replenishing her millinery rooms with a large and varied assortment of spring goods and now has one of the finest stocks ever displayed in this village. Summer hats of all sizes, styles and shapes, a fine lot of ornamental feathers and a brilliant array of artificial fruits and flowers. These latter are becoming quite fashionable for hat trimmings and when skillfully arranged produce a most pleasing effect. A full assortment of ribbons is kept on hand, and all other et ceteras to constitute a complete millinery stock. Her goods are also marked at figures to suit the present close times. Our young ladies and old ladies also will do well to inspect her goods and prices before making their spring purchases. She has secured the services of two first-class trimmers, Miss Allie Warren and Mrs. S. Millard, who will do their best to please.

A WEEK IN THE SUNNY SOUTH.

Dr. Samuel Catlin Takes an Outing Among the Valleys and Mountains of East Tennessee.

On Monday, May 18th, Dr. Samuel Catlin quietly took the Lake Shore train for a brief trip to East Tennessee. No one but his family knew of his departure, and in a day or two his numerous patients began to feel uneasy on account of his absence. He had left them however in good hands, and decided to take a few days respite from professional cares in the sunny Southland. Last Tuesday night the Doctor returned, and yesterday morning we encountered him on the walk. We accepted an invitation to step over to his house and partake of a dish of fresh Chattanooga strawberries, and while there plied him with a long string of questions about his trip. We found him boiling over with enthusiasm and information about East Tennessee. We append a portion of his interview, which will doubtless be of interest to our readers.

"I left home on Monday, a week ago," said the Doctor, "and went to Toledo, from there to Cincinnati and then took the Queen and Cresent route to Chattanooga. From Toledo to Chattanooga is about twenty-four hours ride. I stopped a day at this latter place and then visited Athens, Cleveland, Knoxville, Loudon and other points of interest in that section of the state. It is one of the finest mineral and agricultural sections in the entire south. The average altitude is about 700 feet above ours in Lenawee County, and hence they avoid the sultry climate in mid-summer which prevails in the gulf states. There are 34 counties in East Tennessee, and through every one of these runs a navigable stream. It has 21 rivers, all of which are navigable for float boats, and many of them for steam boats. All empty into the main river, the Tennessee, and when the canal is completed around the Muscle Shoals, large steamers can ascend that river from the mouth to Knoxville, a distance of 1500 miles. Almost every farm in East Tennessee has running water upon it, and the numerous springs, which are found on nearly every farm, make the country unrivalled for dairying purposes. They have water power in East Tennessee adequate to turn all the machinery of the United States. No section of the globe has a finer climate, the mercury rarely goes below zero and rarely above 90°. The mean summer temperature is about 73° and the mean winter temperature about 40°. The mineral resources of East Tennessee are well nigh inexhaustible. their marbles have attained a world wide reputation and the marble exports are increasing rapidly. Four years ago there were only four quarries in East Tennessee, now there are over thirty. Coal and iron abound. Zinc, copper, lead, silver and gold are all found in paying quantities. As an agricultural section it is unsurpassed in the South. All the staple crops are raised to advantage, fruits yield abundantly, while stock raising and dairying are carried on extensively. Knoxville, which is the natural business center of East Tennessee, has had a wonderful growth since the war. In 1870 her population was 8000 now it is nearly 25,000. The city is sustained by a magnificent agricultural country tributary to it, and by large manufacturing establishments within its borders. Among these latter may be mentioned the Knoxville Rolling Mills, R. R. shops. Knoxville Machine Co., four furniture manufacturies, one car wheel factory, five sash and blind factories, one ornamental fence shop, three trunk factories, one button factory, one zinc works, four steam and water flouring mills, and many other smaller establishments. Knoxville is destined to become one of the largest and richest interior cities of the south. This entire section is awakening from its "Rip Van Winkle" sleep and business is booming through the length and breadth of the Tennessee Valley. The spirit of enquiry, like the school-master, is abroad in the land. Northern men and northern capital are flocking ing down there, and East Tennessee will witness a tremendous development during the next twenty-five years. During my stay in Knoxville, a farmers' convention was in session which was largely attended by farmers from all the adjoining counties.

I visited Loudon and Athens, two smaller but smart cities, between Knoxville and Chattanooga. I also made a stop at Cleveland, where our old Tecumseh citizen Dr. Gould is located. He is doing well, and enjoying life. Cleveland is a smart village of about 3000 inhabitants, and rapidly growing. It is located about 30 miles east of Chattanooga. This latter city is one of the booming cities of the South. It has a population of over 30,000 which will be doubled in the next ten years.

I never made a trip which I enjoyed better, and I confess I was considerably facinated with East Tennessee. The climate is delightful, the people intelligent and hospitable, and every encouragement is given to Northern emigrants to settle among them. There are plenty of offerings down there for profitable investments, both in agricultural lands, in manufactures, in business projects and in mining. There is no better section in the South for a Northern man possessed of enterprise and a little surplus capital to locate. I think I shall go down there again before the snow flies."

John R. Clark is at home for a day or two.

Brooklyn Exponent: We came very near having another conflagration last Saturday evening. As G. E. Green was drawing some gasoline from a barrel into a jug, the vapor ignited from a lantern, which was set as far away from the gasoline as the room would permit. The room contained a barrel of gasoline, a half barrel of of it, and also an open pail of the fluid. Geo. had the presence of mind to throw the jug into the back yard before the flames had a chance to spread, or the business portion of our town might have been in ruins. Moral.—Don't draw gasoline by lamp light.

KING'S EVIL
Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this is neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier, symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies, are produced by it.
SCROFULA
Ayer's Sarsaparilla
Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alterative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs, and rejuvenating the entire system. This great
Regenerative Medicine
Is composed of the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla, with Yellow Dock, Stillingia, the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and other ingredients of great potency, carefully and scientifically compounded. Its formula is generally known to the medical profession, and the best physicians constantly prescribe AYER'S SARSAPARILLA as an Absolute Cure
For all diseases caused by the vitiation of the blood. It is concentrated to the highest practicable degree, far beyond any other preparation for which like effects are claimed, and is therefore the cheapest, as well as the best blood purifying medicine, in the world.

HE FELL IN THE STREETS.
Kennedy's Favorite Remedy Cures a Terrible Case of Gravel When Other Help Failed.
What is gravel? What causes it, and who are liable to it? It is frequently attended with a cold sore, and unless relief can be found, produces inflammation and death. Both sexes and all ages are liable to it, although men who have reached or passed middle age are its most common victims. Nothing is more urgently needed than a reliable remedy for Gravel, as the disease seems on the increase, and we are glad to say that such a specific is now before the public in the form of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y. We put in evidence the following letter selected from many similar communications:
PITTSFIELD, Mass., March, 1881.
Dr. David Kennedy,
Dear Sir—You have a right to know, and I desire the world to know my experience with Gravel and my remarkable recovery through the use of your Favorite Remedy. I am a carpenter living in this place, and there are plenty of witnesses to the truth of what I say. My first comparatively slight attack of Gravel was in the year 1878. It passed away and I had little more trouble until last July, 1882. One day when at work in my shop I was suddenly seized with a keen and terrible pain in my left side. I consulted two physicians at once. One said: "I can do nothing for you. Your case is incurable." I was [illegible] and went to the second who said little but gave me a prescription. It did no good. Then began a series of experiences the agony and horror of which words cannot depict. Think of it—I was sometimes taken in the street, and would fall within with agony upon the sidewalk. It was death in life. Thank Heaven I then heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," through Mr. P. F. Cooley. I did not used half a bottle when I passed three stones in succession, one of which was heavy. One fell an inch long. I persevered with the medicine, the symptoms generally abated, and I have no more trouble. I am well, thanks to your Favorite Remedy.
Yours most gratefully,
JAMES D. KENNEDY.
What Favorite Remedy has did in this case it has done in many others. If you desire to do so Address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. WASHINGTON.

The family of the late Secretary Frelinghuysen make no secret of the fact that the first serious illness of Judge Frelinghuysen was due to the aconite that in some unaccountable manner was bottled with the mineral water he used, and Dr. Lincoln, of Washington, says that there was enough left in the bottle to kill four men.

THE EAST.

The trustees for the John F. Slater fund for the education of the freedmen held their annual meeting at New York City on the 20th with ex-President Hayes in the chair. Among those present were Chief Justice Waite, Messrs. J. A. Stewart, W. E. Dodge and M. K. Jessup, of New York; Rev. Dr. S. Haygood, of Georgia, general agent of the board, and G. J. LATER NEWS.

THE scale conference of the iron manufacturers and the Amalgamated Association, which has been in session at Pittsburgh several days, adjourned on the 25th without having reached a settlement. A GOOD COOK.

How a Gentleman Arose Early and Surprised his Wife.

Early at morning Colonel Harvey Bascom awoke and lay for a time in the contemplation of his coming day's work. He remembered that the cook had gone away on an excursion and that during her absence the culinary work would devolve upon Mrs. Bascom.

"I used to be a first-rate cook when I was a boy," the Colonel mused. "Believe I'll quietly slip out and get breakfast. When she awakes and finds everything ready, she'll feel that a great burden has been lifted from her shoulders, for she does hate to cook. Well, I don't blame her any. If I couldn't cook any better than she can I would hate it, too."

The Colonel quietly slipped out and kindled a fire in the kitchen stove. He was not like old Darby. He did not get his hands stuck up with dough, neither did he allow a pig to come in and upset the churn, but with smoothly working system, he prepared breakfast.

"Come, Mary," said the Colonel, entering his wife's room. "Come, it is time to get up."

"Oh, dear," yawned Mrs. Bascom. "I do hate to go out into that old kitchen."

The Colonel laughed. "Why, Mary," said he, while his face beamed brightly, "breakfast is all ready."

"What, has the cook come back?"

"No; I got breakfast myself."

"You did?"

"I did."

"I didn't know that you could cook."

"I knew it. Hustle on your clothes and come on. I must be getting down town."

When they entered the dining-room, Mrs. Bascom was amazed. A steaming dish of scrambled eggs, occupying a central position, was attractive; and, as an allurement to the feast, a broiled steak filled the air.

"You are the smartest thing I ever saw," Mrs. Bascom declared.

The Colonel was pleased. He was tickled. The sounds of praise fell with sweet cadence upon his ears. He turned to a wash basin and was bathing his face when Mrs. Bascom, in a tone of alarm said:

"Look here, didn't you wash your face and hands before you got breakfast?"

"Of course I did, Mary."

Of course he did not, but it would not do to acknowledge the omission.

"Colonel, I don't believe you did."

"Mary, now why do you want to dispute my word?"

"But if you washed your hands once this morning, why do you wash again? I have never before known you to be so particular."

"Well, that's all right. Let's not argue about it. I may not waste as much water as some people do, but I have never been arrested by the sanitary policeman."

"I never did have any confidence in the cleanliness of a man. You wouldn't put on a clean shirt more than once in two weeks if I didn't keep nagging at you."

"That's got nothing to do with this breakfast. I don't know that I ever cooked one of my shirts. Help yourself."

Mrs. Bascom was not thoroughly satisfied. She never questioned the sanitary condition of the negro cook, although the cook was as black and greasy as a primitive wash pot, but woman-like, and very naturally, too, she suspected the Colonel.

"This is what I call coffee, Mary. The man who beats me making coffee must get out of bed before the roosters begin to crow, and even, then, if he don't mind, I'll stay up all night and beat him anyhow."

Mrs. Bascom helped herself to a spoonful of egg. "I know these eggs are good for I broke them in the pan last night. In the matter of eggs, I risk no judgment but my own. Bah! my goodness, Colonel."

"What's the matter?"

"What did you do to the eggs?"

"Cooked them. Of course you have to find fault." He took a mouthful of egg. His jaw dropped. "They do taste sorter curious," he admitted.

"What did you fry them in?"

"Bacon grease."

"Where did you get it?"

"In the jar under the cupboard."

"Wook! you've cooked them in soft soap."—Arkansaw Traveler.

AN EMPRESS IN GUM BOOTS.

Her Investigation of the Grievances of Her Subjects.

The details of the peculiar pilgrimage of the Empress of Austria have just been made public, and have created much amusement mixed with admiration for the royal lady.

It has long been the custom of the reigning house of Austria to imitate the doings of the Caliph of Bagdad at the beginning of the Lenten season. The custom gives the royal rulers an opportunity, which they would not otherwise have, of mingling among their subjects without being known, of listening to their complaints, and getting an insight to their grievances.

This year the handsome and popular Empress disguised herself in an old suit and a pair of gum boots belonging to one of the palace washerwomen. Her valuable jewelry was left at home, and she slept with her hands in a pail of water for two nights in order to give them a rough appearance. Her maids of honor did not recognize the Empress as she pulled the cloak of her waterproof over head, and walked down the back stairs.

The Empress took her way to the poorest quarter of the city, where the tumble-down shanties and big tenements are jumbled together.

In front of No. 18 Strasse de Ravenna a pretty girl stood crying bitterly. She looked up as the Empress approached, and eyed her curiously.

"What is the matter, my dear?" exclaimed the Empress. "Tell me what troubles you, and I will remedy it if it be in my power."

"I want a pair of roller skates," sobbed Beatrice Vincenzo. "Olivette Murphario has a pair of nickel-plated ones and she has taken all my beaux away from me."

The Empress promised to see that Miss Vincenzo got the skates and made a note of it in her diary.

Crossing over to that part of the city whose residents spent their time tearing up the pavements, putting them down again, and voting for the Commissioner of Public Works, the Empress walked up several flights of stairs in a tall tenement. Hearing a woman crying in a small room she opened the door and walked in.

"My daughter has run off with an organ grinder," exclaimed the weeping woman, "and our family will never get over the shock. We are rag-pickers, and I never imagined after the way I brought that girl up that she would disgrace her family by marrying beneath our circle."

The Empress tried to comfort her, and at length promised to give her anything within reason that she might ask for. After thinking for some time the afflicted mother replied:

"I'd like to have a pair of those eighteen-cent vases at Schmidt's. They are a job lot and dirt cheap."

They were sent to her next day by the Empress.

A big man in his shirt-sleeves sat on the curb-stone in a dejected manner opposite the Castle Spinola. Tears from his eyes flooded the gutter, and his throbs threatened to shake him apart. Touched by the man's apparent misery the Empress approached him and said:

"What troubles you, sir?"

"I want to get on the police force, but the Commissioners say that I'm too thin," said the man. "I can only strike a two hundred-pound blow, and they want a man who can kill with one crack of the club."

Once more the Empress promised to use her influence. That evening she started for Niantica, a small village about forty miles from Vienna, where a great number of workmen are employed in the macaroni works.

The Empress walked until almost exhausted. The sight of a mile-post marked "Niantica, thirty miles," discouraged her, and she boarded a Blueline street-car and returned to the palace.

The Empress is greatly impressed with the knowledge of the every-day life of her subjects which she has acquired, and proposes to write a book dealing with her adventures while journeying around incog.—N. Y. Morning Journal.

BLACK SILK DRESSES.

A Description Which Will Serve as a Model for Amateurs.

A handsome dress that will serve as a model for other black silk dresses is of black Sicilienne, with the front and side breadths falling quite plain, like panels, while on each side is a deep plaited fan with narrow jetted galloon run on the edge of each plait; wider galloon borders the panels. Above this is a short crossed drapery of the Sicilienne, while the back hangs long and straight to the foot. The basque is pointed, short, and without plaits; a V of the wide galloon trims it in front and back, and a large bow with sash ends falls on the tournure, being set on the back just below the waist line. A more elegant black dress is of Bengaline, with velvet for the vest, and a single deep fall of black bison lace gathered under the short front and side drapery, and covering the foundation skirt. The basque has a narrow vest, all in one piece of velvet, with a row of jet buttons each side, and laced across with silk cords. The high collar has velvet in front of it the width of the top of the vest, and the velvet cuff has lace laid in folds above it. The Bengaline drapery is a twisted scarf above the deep lace fall in front, while the back is in two pointed wings that have three wide plaited flounces between. Other black dresses combine watered silk with a Bengaline over-dress, using it for the front of the skirt entirely, or else with merely a front and back breadth. For summer there are very pretty dresses of black surah, with a fan apron edged with wide lace, and some ruffles of lace or of surah at the foot, or else the skirt and over-skirt are made of stripes of satin and moire, while the basque is of plain surah; the latter is an economical dress, as it does not require lace for trimming. Very rich black dresses for summer are made of China crape embroidered or brocaded for the skirt, while the over-dress is made of lace, either entirely of piece lace or else of lace flounces formed into lengthwise stripes that alternate with bands of plain crape or of watered silk. These crape and lace dresses take the place of the brocaded grenadines formerly used, while beaded grenadine is now employed as parts of combination black dresses. The beaded grenadine basque and front breadths are preferred to the velvet figured grenadines of last year, and these dresses usually have a mantle of the same to go with them.—Harper's Bazar.

TREE HOUSES.

A Style of Architecture Suited to the Wants of South Pacific Islanders.

The readers of the "Swiss Family Robinson" will remember the famous tree discovered by the children, which was so ingeniously turned into a comfortable home, and a refuge from all possible enemies. Many a boy has thought:

"I would like to have such a home and shelter, but, of course, it is all a fiction, invented to keep up the interest of the story."

A recent traveler among the islands of the South Pacific, however, says that this style of house is common among the natives. Trees grow there to the height of a hundred feet without a branch, and are then full of large boughs and dense leaves. The natives build houses large enough to accommodate ten or twelve inmates, and stock them with provisions, and with stones and other weapons of defense.

To reach the lower branches from the ground, they make long ladders of creeping vines, which are fastened securely at the top, and may be drawn up quickly at notice of coming danger. They do not usually live in the treehouses, but in huts on the ground. When invaders come from the neighboring islands, they retreat to their lofty homes, where they are secure from danger.—Youth's Companion.

Good for a Child;

The ailments of childhood need careful attention and wise treatment. Some people think "anything is good enough for a child, and there isn't much the matter with it anyhow." But judicious mothers know better and do as Mrs. H. W. Perry, of Richmond, Va., does. She says: "I take Brown's Iron Bitters and give it to my children with the most satisfactory results." VICTOR MARIE HUGO

Victor Marie Hugo, one of the greatest writers of the present century, [illegible] was born at the little village of Besançon, on the Rhone Canal, Feb. 26th 1802. His father was an officer of the French Army, whose duties led him a somewhat nomadic life, and the young Victor thus visited Elba, Corsica, Switzerland and Italy before he had reached his teens. In 1809 he was taken to Paris, and under the supervision of his mother began his education. This continued for two years, when in 1811 his father was ordered to Madrid, and young Hugo followed, returning however in 1812. In 1817 he finished his first poem, and from 1819 to 1821 succeeded in carrying off three first prizes for poetry and essays. In 1822 his first volume of poems appeared, and from this time [illegible] such a reputation that he was granted an audience by the King of France. In 1827 his Marion Delorme was prohibited from the stage and created a great sensation. The novels and essays from his pen were also received with the greatest enthusiasm. In 1841 he was received into the Academy, a place for that every French writer is desirous of obtaining. In 1847 Hugo was made a peer by Louis Philippe. He was sent as a deputy to the Constituent Assembly during the Revolution of 1848 and voted with the Conservatives. In 1851 he was one of those who vainly attempted to assert the rights of the assembly, and to preserve the Constitution. For [illegible] in this affair he was exiled and fled to the Island of Jersey in the British Channel. After the fall of the Empire he returned to Paris, and in 1871 was elected to represent the Department of the Seine in the National Assembly. His works have been translated into all of the civilized languages and are known to all classes. In spite of his years he is still hale and hearty, he eats well and drinks well, and his only infirmity is deafness. Hugo himself will tell you that he is stone deaf, but his friends maintain that he is only hard of hearing. On Thursdays and Sundays, which are reception days, the poet goes to bed about ten o'clock, at other times he retires at half past nine, and in the morning he works in bed, and rises about ten. He breakfasts lightly, walks, and in spite of the supplications of his family, he occasionally indulges in his old distraction of riding on the knife-board of a 'bus. Whatever the weather, Victor Hugo obstinately refuses to wear an overcoat, and bad as he is he persists in abundant cold water ablutions, but he no longer takes his 'tub' as he used to do during the siege of Paris, when he was staying with his old friend, Paul Maurice, after his return from exile, and when he used to break the ice with his heel on cold mornings. His attendance at the Senate is less regular than formerly, but whenever Cesare Corman writes to him to say that he must come to vote, he never fails, and whenever there is an election at the Academy he is always there. Victor Hugo still works, but of course not very much; he has his bolster and pillow placed at the foot of his bed, so as to receive the light directly from the window, and pencil in hand, passes an hour or two every morning in classifying and correcting his unpublished works in prose and verse. He has in manuscript half a dozen plays, several volumes of verse, and two volumes of philosophy which will be published after his death. The plays have never been produced on the stage, because since his exile he has decided never to expose himself to the hisses of an enemy.

Since the above was in type the cable news comes across the ocean that this great author has suddenly passed to his eternal reward.

Chairman of Fire committee reported verbally for minority of committee recommending that adjoining land on East and North of the council building to give ample room for engine and hose-cart, to build new cells, provide a suitable room for the fire department, build a barn for team and sheds for corporation tools, and that one or more 1000 barrel cisterns be provided for additional water supply; that such land could be purchased, improvements in the building made and new barn and sheds be built for a cost not to exceed two thousand dollars; and that a 1000 barrel cistern could be made for three hundred dollars.

Minority report of fire committee made verbally by Mr. Bills recommending that Mr. Baird, a competent engineer be employed at an expense not to exceed fifty dollars, to make accurate estimates of the expense and practicability of different water supply cisterns, in accordance with authority heretofore given the fire committee, with the view of the adoption by the Village of the Holly, or some equally efficient, water works.

On motion of Mr. Hall the majority report of fire committee was accepted and Three Thousand Dollars appropriated to buy additional land, to build and furnish a suitable place to keep the team, engine and fire apparatus and the same to include building of cisterns in accordance with said report.

Fire Committee further reported favorably upon the petition of C. M. Adams to remove her present dwelling to the north side of her lot and erect a new frame dwelling upon said premises.

Report accepted and adopted and petition granted.

REPORTS OF OFFICERS.

Recorder reported that he had received bids from both the Tecumseh Herald and Tecumseh News to print the Council proceedings for ensuing year for sum of twenty dollars.

Report and both bids accepted.

On motion said license was granted.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

Mrs. George Rowland who has been visiting Mrs. F. D. Lancaster returned to her home in Albion, last Saturday.

Mrs. Emily Wally, who has been a guest of Mrs. E. R. Smith, left Clinton for Elkhart, Ind., last Tuesday.

Mrs. John T. Clark and daughter went to Blissfield Saturday for a two weeks visit.

Mrs. E. R. Smith entertained a large number of friends at her home last Monday evening.

Chas. Fisk of Detroit was in town last week.

Mr. John Brooks returned to St. Ignace, last Saturday.

Mrs Kate Strait of Jackson, is a guest of Mrs. E. VanDeMark.

Mrs. Jane Westfall of Hillsdale, is visiting at A. B. VanDeMark's.

John Vaughn and Frank Fish left here last week for Newton, Iowa, intending to stop off at Albion over Sunday.

Several Masons went from here to Manchester last Sunday, to assist in decorating the Mason's graves at that place. Masonic decoration will take place here on the 24th of June.

Mr. and Mrs. Orrin Safford of Flint, left Clinton Tuesday for Whitmore Lake.

Notwithstanding the bad weather, decoration day was observed here just as had been planned, with the exception of the speaking and music, which took place at the Town Hall instead of in the Cemetery where a temporary stage had been erected. The flowers were all beautiful, especially the crosses made by Mrs. Alonzo Clark. A number of persons went from here to Tecumseh in the afternoon.

The Episcopal social held last Thursday evening at Mrs. Laura VanDeMark's was largely attended and enjoyed by all present. The music furnished by Mrs. Jo. St. John, Miss Lizzie Brooks, Miss Nellie Kishpaugh, and Mrs. Franc Graham was excellent.

A large number of "Reunionsts" visited the High School Thursday forenoon, and entertained themselves and the pupils of the present time, by hunting up their old seats, telling anecdotes of their school days, ringing the old bell, and taking possession of the whole building. A happier lot of people than the ones who have taken part in this reunion would be very hard to find. The enjoyment and satisfaction expressed by those who came from abroad, more than repays the old pupils here, who have worked so hard for the last few weeks in making arrangements for this occasion.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Some hail with the rain Sunday.

Misses Satie and Minta Jackson, of Pennington's Corners, visited friends here Thursday and Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Temple visited friends in Laseli the past week.

W. H. Arner was on the sick list for a few days.

Mr. Herring moved on to Samuel Rappleye's farm west of the village Saturday.

Dr. D. W. Loree's hay baling gang baled 5¼ tons in two hours and thirty-five minutes, at Irve Osborne's barn on the prairie.

Mrs. Dan Allen spent a few days at Jerome with her son Frank Allen, who is agent there.

Sidney Clarkson, of Ann Arbor, and Eugene Clarkson of Detroit, made there father, Mr. John Clarkson, and family a visit over Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Collar, of Adrian, spent the Sabbath at Mrs. Louis Miller's.

During the heavy thunder storm Friday night, Mr. John Pattison had a sheep, two lambs and a yearling colt killed by lightning.

On Saturday at the appointed hour the Britton band met G. A. R. Post, No. 222, from Britton at the depot as the train arrived, and at half past twelve the procession formed at the corner of Church and Chicago streets in the following order:

Britton Band.
G. A. R. Post.
Christian S. S. of Britton.
M. E. S. S. of our village.
R. L. S. Choir.
Citizens in carriages.

The procession proceeded in line of march up Chicago st., to Cemetery st., thence to the cemetery, where the memorial exercises were carried out successfully.

Music—Britton Band.
Song—"Scatter Flowers"—R. L. S. Choir.
Distributing flowers by the Post.
Solo—"Cover them over with flowers"—Mrs. James Haight.

At the first grave decorated, the band played a dirge as the Post proceeded with the decorating services.

Address of Welcome by the Commander of the Post.
Prayer—Rev. James Wright.
Song—"Beautiful Flag of Liberty"—R. L. S. Choir.
Oration—Rev. James Wright.
Song—"America"—By all.
Music—Band.
Benediction—Rev. Peter Sharp.

After which the returning line of march was taken to the village, when all departed for their several homes well pleased with the first Memorial services ever held in our cemetery.

On Friday morning May 29, at four o'clock, Mrs Edith Griffin's spirit took its flight after a sickness of a few months, with that slow but sure disease, consumption. The funeral services were held at the residence of her father, Mr. Fred Morrell, where her last days were spent. Everything that a father could do was done for his daughter. She was a noble wife and an obedient loving daughter. She leaves a large circle of friends who mourn their loss. The Rev. Jas. Wright officiated.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Instead of the long procession of carriages wending toward Napoleon Decoration Day, a driving rain flooded deserted streets, and few people ventured beyond doors until afternoon, but brought no word of those who being nearer the base of operations were safe from drench, while listening to battles fought in memory. Extra preparation had been made to honor the fallen, but disappointment is the result known to date.

The soldiers' home inquiry meeting is shrouded in silence yet awhile, the only item made public being that the call was not slighted. It is possible that opposition to the state's acceptance of Mr. Cook's gift will be manifested in many ways by those whose interests are anchored to cities, but it happens to be a case where slight is no disgrace, and as the scheme blossoms with the new regime, it will be comical diplomacy to refuse a life long democrat the privilege of planting a commemorative sprig of laurel for a sheltering banyan irrespective of party prejudice.

SPRINGVILLE SIFTINGS.

Jas. H. Breese is employed by the day under the new administration of affairs at the mill.

Mrs. Nelia Wood has been quite sick for some time but is able to be out again.

F. A. Groger has purchased the lot joining T. H. Mosher's, of Mrs. R. L. Osborn and expects to put up a dwelling some time during the season.

Mr. Thomas Green, W. H. Smith's brother-in-law has returned from N. Y. city and thinks of making Michigan his future home.

H. Monagan is delivering the road warrants this week.

Amount of Primary School moneys belonging to Cambridge, in treasurer Hoag's hands is $414.00. Library $9.39. The following new books were added to the library last Tuesday: Young Girls Wooing, Without A Home Shadowed to Europe, Romola, Daniel Deronda, Mill on the Floss, Michigan Pioneer Col., The Gilded Clique, Wit, Humor and Pathos, Loy's Lord Bereseford, Other People's Money.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Our city is improving slowly but surely. The drug store has lately received a coat of paint, inside and out, and now Kelley, Hoxsie & Co. are painting their store, which makes a decided improvement in appearance. We are also in the enjoyment of over twenty feet of sidewalk in front of the post office. May the good work go on.

A colt belonging to Chester Clark got tangled up in some barbed wire one day last week and was nearly skinned alive. We think it about time to pulverize this barbed wire business. Observation leads us to believe that it destroys more horses every year than it amounts to, besides it makes an unsightly fence, and is about as near a nuisance as anything we know of. Will our legal editor please inform us if there is any law against its use as a line or road fence.

Warren Holdridge says he has got the best colt in Raisin and it does seem as though a fellow's word ought to be good for that much. Here are the figures. It weighed, the day it was one year old, eight hundred and forty pounds, is fifteen hands one and one half inches high, bright bay in color, and as lively as a red squirrel. Next.

Mrs. Frink rode out on Sunday, which was something of a treat after a couple of months housing.

Al Macham is plastering his house and says it is just fun to live in a house and build it over one's head.

J. S. Gilman is a better man than we took him to be. A man drove across his garden the other day with two horses and a wagon and the old gent says he never swore once.

THE CLINTON REUNION.

We are permitted to print herewith the essays of Mrs. Bigelow and Mrs. Wheedon, delivered at the Clinton Reunion, and which we were compelled to omit last week. The poem by A. H. Snow, of Winona, Minn., was a fine production, and was certainly one of the very best features of the entire program. Dr. House's valedictory was also worthy of the man and the occasion. As they were both quite lengthy however, we are reluctantly compelled to forego their publication.

Several more letters of regret have been received which did not appear in last week's list and which are appended below.

Mason Lazell, Caro, Mich.

MRS. WHEDON'S ESSAY.

"You'd scarce expect one of my age
To speak in public on the stage."

And "when in the course of human events" the fertile minds of these people in Clinton, who conceived the plan of holding this reunion, asked me to read a paper this evening, it occurred to me in accordance with some suggestions received, that a sketch of the actors of the quarter of a century ago, that we are commemorating, would not prove uninteresting. Upon reflection however, I found that I had undertaken a herculean task, far beyond the capacity of my feeble powers. Think of it! A history of the nine teachers who taught the young idea to shoot, and the one hundred and seventy-one who shot. A sketch would produce volumes, and even the history of a very few would have occupied more time than was alloted to me; beside producing heart burnings, and jealousies among the rest of us, who consider our lives so eventful, and full of interest. Who could relate the story of these twenty-two farmers, expatiate upon the fertility of their broad acres, the beauty and convenience of their buildings, the crops they raise, the cows they milk, the horses they drive, the sheep they shear, the swine they butcher, the fowls they keep, and the pin money their wives derive from the sale of eggs and butter? Or dilate upon the beauty, variety, excellence, and unrivalled cheapness of the goods of four dry goods, two clothing and one shoe merchant? Who could give an adequate idea of the business and lives of two hardware and two grocery merchants? Who is able to learn the history of the three lawers? Who would dare to study the history of the three doctors and one druggist? Who could fathom the depths of the lives of the two commission merchants and speculators? Or follow the footsteps of two insurance agents and four commercial travelers? Who could estimate the shaves of one barber, or tell the story of the clerks, the carpenters, the mechanics and the various miscellaneous employments which the boys of twenty-five years ago are now engaged in? Alas! who would wish to make public the history of our one undertaker! Would any one be rash enough to study the lives of these sixty-five wives? Could any pen portray the beauties, the virtues, precocity of the one hundred and twenty-five children? Or place before you in its lofty heroism a sketch of our two mothers-in law? Where is the historian who would invade the privacies of the lives of fifteen maidens who are enjoying the pleasures of single blessedness, or even ask for the life history of these seven bachelors who are obliged to keep a watchful eye on their own wardrobes, and sew on the missing buttons? We might be permitted to peep into the studios of our two lady artists, but there would be no story to tell of the privations of a clergyman, or the harassing struggles of an editor. Who is sufficient for these things? Not I, and the heart-rending thought forced itself upon my mind that to the world at large the knowledge of this remarkable corps of teachers and pupils will go down into oblivion unknown, unhonored, unwritten in the annals of history. But let us console ourselves with this reflection: we know we appreciate our teachers and ourselves, we know there are here many mute "inglorious Miltons" who only have lacked the opportunity to develop the wonderful talents that are latent.

"Many a flower is born to blush unseen" and we fear our great abilities will never be acknowledged by the world outside of our circle. We have experienced many joys, many sorrows, the sunshine of prosperity has made bright our pathway, and the clouds of adversity have sometimes obscured it. To each life has come a proportion of tragedy and comedy which must remain intact. "The heart knoweth its own bitterness, and a stranger intermeddleth not with its joy. A very large proportion of the scholars of the Clinton Union School, under the immediate tutelage of Prof. and Mrs. Williams from Jan. 1st, 1859 to April 1863 are living and most of them have responded to the invitation to be present today. The list as far as known comprises one hundred and seventy-two names. Of these there are four of whom we can learn no tidings. Twenty-six have passed life's portals and entered upon the great beyond. The nine teachers who were connected with the school during those years are still living, and those who are not with us have sent greeting, except two.

Historians generally concede that the age in which a nation lives exerts a marked influence upon that nation and to obtain a correct knowledge of a people one must learn something of the spirit of their times. I reverse that order, and will endeavor to show to you what progress the world has made by our living in these days. Who shall say we have not done great things, or at least that great events have marked the history of the past twenty-five years? Do you suppose any previous age could have made such rapid strides? Did ever a Darwin arise to promulgate the theory of evolution, and the origin of the species, that our first progenitors were monkeys until we had arrived upon the stage of action? Has not the system of telegraphy been perfected, and continents that are separated by vast oceans become practically neighbors by the use of the submarine Cable? Did man ever learn to annihilate space for the range of the human voice? Was the telephone ever dreamed of until in our time? Franklin indeed chained the forked lightnings, but it remained for an Edison and his contemporaries to turn night into day by the use of the electric light. Is it not in our remembrance that our fathers mowed their hay and reaped their grain with the scythe and cradle instead of the mowers and self-binders that do the work of their sons? Our fathers walked behind their plows; the fathers of to-day ride on their silky plows. Our fathers raked their hay with wooden rakes, and mowed it into their barns with a two-tined pitchfork. The horse rake and horse pitch fork make that work much easier and more quickly done by their sons. The silhouetts and daguereotypes of a half century ago are replaced by the photograph and by the instantaneous process of to-day; even the baby's lineaments may be copied during the brief intervals of crying between colic and teething. Our grandmothers plied their needles with busy fingers, and sewed the long seams with patient labor. With the exercise of hands and feet their grand daughters make the sewing-machine not only sew the seams, but stitch, tuck and ruffle in the same length of time. The long winter evenings of our grandmothers were spent in knitting and before they had had time to locate the seam stitch, our stockings will be completed and ready to be shaped by the feet that wear them, and our evenings may be spent in the facinating exercise of roller-skating. O! the changes! The new things and new ways of making the old things. The children of the former time are young men and ladies now and are wiser in their generation than were their parents at double their ages. You cannot fail to perceive what a mighty power we have exerted. What blessings we bestow upon prosterity. We are a wonderful, remarkable class. Let us not depreciate or underate our abilities. The realization of what we are, and what our children may be fill our minds with thoughts too deep for utterance. It is well I did not bring this subject to your consideration in the fore part of our meeting, as we might have been so elated that we could not have done justice to the banquet provided for us by our generous hosts and hostesses of the day. It is best to meditate upon our greatness with full stomachs. We cannot always take as sublime and correct views of life before supper as afterward you know. I might bring to your remembrance the changes in ourselves as well as the times but I forbear to weary you. We are going over the hill of life, dear friends, and look back with fond memories to our happy school days. Perhaps there were some we thought tiresome but those are long ago forgotten. We only think of the fun and good times we had together. They are gone and the hopes and anticipations of youth, we are now living again in our children. Thus history repeats itself. I hope the committee of arrangements for the reunion of 1910 will exercise more discrimination in selecting a historian than did the one of 1885, but they will not find one who desires to paint your history in more glowing and lasting colors, or who holds the members of this reunion in more affectionate remembrance.

"There is no time like the old time
When you and I were young,
When the buds of April blossomed,
And the birds of Spring-time sung!
The garden's brightest glories
By summer sun's are nursed,
But oh, the sweet, sweet violets,
The flowers that opened first!

"There is no friend like the old friend,"
Who has shared our morning-days,
No greeting like his welcome,
No homage like his praise.
Fame is the scentless sunflower,
With gaudy crown of gold,
But friendship is the breathing rose,
With sweets in every fold."

"There are no times like the old times—
They shall never be forgot!
There is no place like the old place,
Keep green the dear old spot!
There are no loves like our old loves;
May Heaven prolong their days!
There are no friends like our old friends,
God bless our separate ways."

BILIOUSNESS.

Bilious symptoms invariably arise from indigestion, such as furred tongue, vomiting of bile, giddiness, sick headache, irregular bowels. The liver secretes the bile and acts like a filter or sieve, to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action or suspension of its functions the bile is liable to overflow into the blood, tainting and discoloring the complexion, producing bilious attacks, a languid weary feeling and many other depressing symptoms. Biliousness may be properly termed an affection of the liver, and can be thoroughly cured by the grand regulator of the liver and biliary organs, BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS. Acting on the stomach, bowels and liver, making healthy bile and pure blood, and opens the culverts and sluiceways for the outlet of disease. Sold everywhere and guaranteed to cure.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

Works through the blood, regulating, toning and invigorating all the functions of the body.

Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1878.

C. I. HOOD & Co.: Gentlemen— * * * I have had ringworm humor and salt-rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores, so, also, my head and face. I have had any number of doctors in the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I felt forced to try it, although I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,
EDGAR F. WHITMAN.

Biliousness, Sick Headache.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & Co.: Gents—Please send me by express two bottles HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA and a few Cook Books for distribution. Your preparation has worked wonders in the case of my wife, who has been troubled with sick headache and biliousness for years. She only took one-half teaspoonful at a dose, and has not been so well for five years as now. She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from those severe headaches. She has not taken any of any account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others some good, and we must have it in the house.

Yours truly,
HOMER B. NASH.

THE TOMBS BARBER.

What He Says About the Persons Whose Faces He Lathers—Particular Customers.

"Yes, I am the Tombs barber," said Morris Haber, an intelligent young German, who was found in his barber shop on Canal Street by a reporter, "and you are the first newspaper fellow to find me out, although I have held that position for nearly two years. Any other barbers admitted to the prisons? No, sir; I am the only one, and was appointed by the Commissioners of Charities and Correction. Salary? Not any. My earnings consist of what the prisoners give me, except in cases of condemned murderers, and then the Sheriff pays me.

"I am allowed to enter the prison at any time, but usually only go there three days of the week, on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. I am now shaving about twenty prisoners a day there, and what I get averages about eight dollars a week. No prisoners are compelled to get shaved, but the greater number who have any spare change always wish to. This is generally the case with those who are about to go into court. They want to make their best appearance before the court and jury, and it has come to be a common saying among them that a clean shave means ten years off their sentence.

"In winter I go there regularly every morning at eight o'clock and in summer at seven o'clock. I carry my razors, scissors, soap and bottles in a small hand-bag, and my hair-clipping machine in a leather case. I generally take five or six razors with me every time. When I get there, the first thing I do is to look over the slate and find the prisoners' names marked with an 'X.' This means that they are the ones who are to go to court. As court always opens at ten o'clock, and as I have learned from experience how much importance is attached to a 'clean shave' by the prisoners with reference to their appearance in the court-room, I always take pains to get through with the 'court cases' early and as soon as possible, even leaving my regular customers there—and I have several—until they are out of the way.

"So I go along each row of cells the first thing, and I ask each prisoner whether he wants a shave or not. Sometimes I find a great many who do, and then it is lively work, for I have to shave them in their cells, and there are no chairs in them for the men to sit on, consequently I have to shave them sitting on the edge of their narrow beds. In each case the keeper locks me in with the prisoner, and I have to call his attention by knocking on the door when I am done and want to get out.

"I have never had a prisoner molest me or even act rudely to me while at my work there, notwithstanding the fact that the Tombs has an average of from 150 to 200 prisoners all the time, and from all classes of criminals. The prison seems to have a quieting influence on them and they are more polite to me as a rule, in saying their 'good morning,' and 'good day,' than many outsiders. I have never had them ask me to bring them things they are not permitted to have or try to get me to help them to escape or get the best of the keepers. As for the sight of my razors stirring up any desperate thoughts in the minds of any of them, if they have I've never known of it.

"The new prisoners seldom talk to me, and of course I don't ask questions. Naturally, the faces are changing all the time, in the going away of some and coming in of new prisoners. Every now and then some new comer will greet me with a 'how-d'-do,' and I will find that he is an old offender who has been in the Tombs before and remembers me. But they all seem glad to see me, for it makes a little change in their prison life. Those who have been there some time talk more, and sometimes tell me about their cases, but I don't take much interest in the particulars, naturally, though I give the poor fellows all the sympathy I can.

"My oldest customer here? Let me see. It is Conroy, I guess, the policeman condemned to be hung on the charge of murder. He has been in the Tombs about seventeen months, and is now waiting for a new trial, I believe. I have shaved him regularly twice a week since he has been there, and he is one of those who have talked to me about their affairs.

"Another of my regular customers there is Donovan, condemned to imprisonment for life for killing a man with a billiard cue. He is also waiting or trying to get a new trial. He has been there a year. John Carpenter, condemned to be hung for killing his wife, is another of my customers there. He has been in the Tombs eight months, hoping for a new trial.

"People might readily think that those men, knowing that they must stay there so long, and perhaps in prison forever, or be hung, would get careless about their appearance, and let the barber go by. But they don't, and they are as particular to be shaved twice a week as my customers here at the shop. They will take pride in their looks, and as they have frequent visitors, they want to look nice for them, I suppose.

"One of the most particular customers I ever had in there was Rhinelander, the man that was claimed to be insane. He was in a long time, and always paid me extra, but he was very particular to be shaved three times a week, and just so. If I missed a day he would get very angry. Very few, however, pay me extra. They are not lavish with their money when they get in the Tombs, and those who are fortunate enough to have any keep it very close.

"Billy McGlory paid me extra, though, and I found him a very nice man. Another man I thought was pretty nice was Martin, the celebrated counterfeiter. He became blind while in there and was in the hospital. He had a long beard and was very particular to have it trimmed to a hair. Another very particular man was a negro of Spanish descent, a young man condemned for murder. He was always one of the neatest and cleanly-looking men of the whole lot, and he always wanted me to take great pains over him, to fix his hair just right and give him a close shave."—*N. Y. Brought Home a Wagon.

Louisville, Ky.—Mr. J. Helmus, Vice President of the City Brewery, was brought home in a wagon, carried up two pair of stairs by two of his men and laid on the bed. He was suffering with a severe attack of rheumatism contracted in the ice vaults of the brewery. He refused to have a doctor, but dispatched a servant for a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, with the result that in one week he was entirely cured and able to return to his desk.

Very Remarkable Recovery.

Mr. Geo. V. Willing, of Manchester, Mich., writes: "My wife has been almost helpless for five years, so helpless that she could not turn over in bed alone. She used two Bottles of Electric Bitters, and is so much improved, that she is able now to do her own work." Electric Bitters will do all that is claimed for them. Hundreds of testimonials attest their great curative powers. Only fifty cents a bottle at C. A. Wright & Co.

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition; enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood if pure makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

It is asserted that about a third of the banking done in the world is done in the British empire.

They claim for it superior merits over all other remedies of its kind, and guarantee for it a positive and sure cure for Rheumatism Syphillis, and all blood disorders. It frees the skin from spots and disease, and leaves the complexion clear. Ask them about it.

A bowl of good pea soup is as satisfying as a hearty dinner on a cold day. To make a gallon of it, wash a pint of peas and soak them over night; then boil in five pints of water, gently simmering three hours or so, until thoroughly soft. With a potato-masher rub the soup through a colander or wire sieve. A pound of beef or ham bone may be boiled with the peas. The soup may be seasoned in various ways—with onions, cloves, pepper, etc.

ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES CLOTHES.

Wash as you please, and it will make you its friend. Soak, boil and don't rub; or soak, rub and don't boil. We advocate dispensing, so far as possible with the washboard, because it wears the clothes out and wears you out. The soap contains no mineral to give it weight, and no pulp to give it size; therefore frequent boiling will not yellow or injure the clothes, but soaking and boiling with ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP does clean and disinfect them. One thing is certain; it produces glorious results, is an economical soap and is so pure and harmless that the writer washes his head with it without injuring a hair, and he isn't bald either. Try it in the Laundry, Kitchen and Bath. Ask your grocer for it and take no other.

The Opera House was well filled last Monday evening to listen to a temperance lecture by Rev. Mr. Ferris. Good vocal music was provided by some of our temperance singers. Mr. Ferris's address was well received, and the meeting was quite a success. We understand that our temperance workers contemplate getting up a series of these meetings.

The Secretary of the State Pioneer Society has issued the following circular.

This Society is desirous of obtaining a copy of all county histories in the State that have been published, and it is believed that there are some persons in each county where such a history has been published who are willing to donate one to the Society as a book of reference for the use of those throughout the State who are fast becoming accustomed to look to this Society for historical information.

It is requested that the person into whose hands this circular may fall will use his best endeavor to find a copy that can be so donated, and any person who can make such a donation is requested to correspond with the undersigned.

GEORGE H. GREENE,
Corresponding Secretary.
Lansing, Mich.

Miss J. A. Hough has been replenishing her millinery rooms with a large and varied assortment of spring goods and now has one of the finest stocks ever displayed in this village. Summer hats of all sizes, styles and shapes, a fine lot of ornamental feathers and a brilliant array of artificial fruits and flowers. These latter are becoming quite fashionable for hat trimmings and when skillfully arranged produce a most pleasing effect. A full assortment of ribbons is kept on hand, and all other et ceteras to constitute a complete millinery stock. Her goods are also marked at figures to suit the present close times. Our young ladies and old ladies also will do well to inspect her goods and prices before making their spring purchases. She has secured the services of two first-class milliners, Miss Allie Warren and Mrs. S. Millard, who will do their best to please.

There travels on the Wabash railroad a train-boy who thought he was very sharp and observing. The other day he sold a couple of nickel cigars to an Adrian man, who often comes to Morenci, and pocketed twenty cents apiece for them. The Adrianite quietly permitted himself to be defrauded, but detemined to bide his time in getting even with the young swindler. It came but a short time after, when, on making one of his usual trips, he was again approached by the train boy, who wished to sell him some more smokers. The Adrian man took three, and, lighting one himself, gave the others to the conductor and brakeman; but said nothing about paying for them. The train boy stood hesitatingly at hand for a few moments, and then suggested that he would like some money. But his customer was indifferent. Pretty soon, after going through the train, he returned to the Adrian man, and said: "Say, mister, are you the fellow that I got twenty cents of apiece for cigars? Well, I thought you were some chap from Seneca and I could beat you. Say, take another cigar, and call it even." That train-boy will probably be more careful hereafter.—Morenci Observer.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD,

TECUMSEH, MICH., JUNE 4, 1885.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

The small boy rejoiceth for the circus is coming.

Adrian is talking up a Fourth of July celebration.

The spring term of the Morenci schools closed last Friday.

Decoration Day was very generally celebrated throughout the County.

The new hotel at the east end of Wampler's lake will be opened to-day.

A. W. Mills was absent at Grand Rapids a day or two last week upon a business trip.

Rev. Mr. Copley is in Morenci this week attending the Lenawee County Baptist Association.

What's in a name? Postmaster Stearns of Adrian, goes in, and postmaster Stearns, of Blissfield, goes out.

We call attention to the card of F. H. Kneeland, among special notices, of an eighty acre farm for sale. It is a good bargain.

Edgar Ide will doubtless steer clear of bicycles in the future. He took a "header" off of one last Monday and seriously sprained his arm. He now carries it in a sling.

During a brief visit at Toledo last Monday we called on our old townsman, George Smith. We found him feeling unusually happy, and, upon enquiring the cause, ascertained that it was the fortieth anniversary of his wedding day. May he live to enjoy many more returns of the day.

Having obtained the proper permit from the Common Council, Mrs. P. R. Adams will remove the old bank house, which has been the family residence for so many years, and erect a fine new dwelling upon that site. The old house will be moved to the North part of the same lot and rebuilt.

Clinton Local: The wool has commenced to whirl upon the cards at the woolen mill, the first consignment having been made thereto Wednesday, and now the old mill is no more silent but meets us with the familiar hum of former times. By the first of next week that part of the village will not be so monotonous any more.

Monday is the ministers' vacation day. Last Monday afternoon we saw Rev. Geo. W. Hudson marching up the street with a fine cane fish pole. We are glad to know that Bro. Hudson isn't ashamed to take a little healthy recreation occasionally. No sensible man can object to his going a fishing on Monday, if he catches a good string of fish.

Adrian Times: The insinuations that the editor of the Hudson Gazette voted the prohibition ticket last fall are unfair, unjust and untrue. The story is only receiving circulation at the hands of parties desiring to defeat the aforesaid editor in the race for the Hudson postmastership. All Hudson democrats know that W. T. B. Schermerhorn was to have received the office, and, since his death, a worthy son deserves the place, if justice is justice.

Blissfield Advance: Michigan has among her citizens another old "residenter," Mr. Stephen Frary, of this place, who came to the settlement at the River Raisin (now Monroe) with his parents in April 1816, and has resided in that state ever since, making in all three perhaps as old if not the oldest residents of the state, viz. E. S. Rhoades, January, 1810; Stephen Frary, April, 1816; W. W. Bliss, March, 1817. But the order of their settlement in Blissfield was reversed, Bliss coming in December, 1824, Frary in January, 1825 and Rhoades in the spring of 1826.

Tecumseh has received its first honor from the new administration. Sumner Collins, a former Macon boy, who passed through our High School and graduated with honor in the class of 1877, afterwards studied law in the office of Geo. V. N. Lothrop at Detroit. Mr. Lothrop has now appointed Mr. Collins his private secretary, and the latter will accompany the new Russian minister to the realms of the Czar. Sumner's old Macon and Tecumseh friends will extend their warmest congratulations upon his good fortune. We believe Mr. Collins will fill the position most acceptably.

L. F. Wheeler went to Clinton last week expecting to take a view of the reunionists, but upon getting there he was informed that his services were not desired. The Clinton Local offers this explanation of the matter:

There appeared to be a misunderstanding in regard to the picture that was to be taken of Mr. and Mrs. Williams and classmates, by L. F. Wheeler, of Tecumseh. Lavern said to us that he knew nothing of the matter until one of the old pupils came to him and advised him of the wishes of many that he should come up and take the picture, and we think he does not get bewildered either. It was too bad and we think now, had the matter been fairly understood when mentioned in the hall, it would have been all right, for we have met parties who understood that if they went out for the picture, they were to pay $1 apiece, and other parties who have said they would give much more than that to have one of them, and we think the last named were numerous.

Morris Knapp, of Adrian, was in town Tuesday.

Doris's great circus will pitch its tents in Tecumseh on Saturday, June 20th.

Our old Tecumseh friend, C. V. Hicks, has been elected village President of Oscoda.

The Commencement exercises at Raisin Valley Seminary will be held this year on Friday, June 19th.

Dr. Will Aten, of Brooklyn, N. Y. arrived in town last Thursday. He will remain during the summer.

Rev. Mr. Hudson will preach to the Young People next Sunday morning. Subject, "How to Conquer an Enemy."

Bills' race track has been ploughed and graded to make ready for the summer's campaign of blanket matinees.

N. Atherton, Lumber Inspector, from Toledo, is with the Tecumseh Lumber Co., this week inspecting lumber.

The M. & O. Road is now running Sunday excursion trains from Homer to Devil's lake and a Sunday train will soon be put on from Toledo.

We notice Abner Wilson, our enterprising market gardener, has come out with a bran new delivery wagon which is something new in this line.

Two hundred and three Planet Jr., cultivators have been sold in this market since their first introduction in the spring of 1882, and they have all been sold on their merits.

Miss Emma Hawke, of Adrian, is "lalloing" in the Tecumseh exchange for a few days. Miss Chiverall, the regular operator, being detained at home on account of the serious illness of her mother.

Rev. R. B. Pope of Ann Arbor, will give a free lecture in the Methodist Episcopal Church, Tecumseh, Wednesday, June 10th, at 7:30 P. M. Subject, "How to obtain a Personal Acquaintance with the Scriptures."

Slayton & Son have received from the Columbus Buggy Co., four of their celebrated buggies. One is an elegant Phaeton for H. S. Lee, one a Brewster for Albert Brewer and one a light gentlemen's driving side spring, the gear finished in oil and varnish, for Charles Bidwell.

The Universalist church is undergoing a thorough renovation inside. The walls have been covered with paper and decorations, the inside woodwork and pews will be varnished and a new carpet laid. The paper was purchased at Wright's and Friend McNeil did the work. It is one of the finest jobs of papering in the village.

Do not forget that the Adrian Dist. Sunday School Institute will meet with the Methodist Episcopal Church, Tecumseh, on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. An interesting program will be presented. The subject on Tuesday afternoon will be of special interest to teachers, "How to successfully interest a Sunday School Class."

A violent hail storm passed over the township of Macon last Sunday about dark. Hail fell to the depth of an inch in many places, and much damage was done to the growing crops. The storm passed north and east of our village but escaped us entirely. The central portion of the town of Macon caught the brunt of the storm.

We notice two complete Steam Threshing Rigs leaving Slayton & Son's warehouse last week. They were made by Nichols, Shepard & Co., of Battle Creek, and were nicely finished. The engines were 10 horse, self guide traction, and as they run out without horses attracted quite a crowd. Chas. Avery was the owner of one rig and Frank and Lyman Davenport the other.

Clinton Local: Clinton is the possessor of a young lady who does not know of a living relative, but has been her own independent supporter since she was eleven years old, and mentions a day's work performed on third of July, in which she made 313 pies and three tubs full of doughnuts, and other nick-nacks of lesser mention. 'Twas a big days work, but it was what Julia Dunn, nevertheless.

The senior polo team of Tecumseh, went up to Manchester last Thursday night with the intention of "doing up" the club in that village. Their intentions were good but their playing was the opposite, as the home team won four straight goals from the seniors in about half an hour. The boys need more practice. Herning, one of the Tecumsehs also got defeated in a one mile race against Frank Burtis of that place.

Adrian Press: In the removal of postal clerks Col. Eldridge informs us that no congressman is allowed to have any voice or influence. The department runs its own business, and will not remove a route agent because a congressman requests it nor retain one because he desires it. The congressman is notified whenever change is made and required to appoint a man to fill the vacancy. He has no control over the route or his work. If he fails to appoint one within ten days some other congressman is asked to fill the vacancy.

Robt Stretch is at home for a few days.

Regular services at the Universalist church next Sunday.

Will Whiting is on the improve and is able to be up and dressed.

Sidney Clarkson, of Ann Arbor, spent Sunday at his old home in Macon.

Knapp's sextette band attended the Decoration ceremonies at Clinton last Saturday forenoon.

Mrs. Hiram Sherman left home Tuesday last for Williamston Mich., upon a visit at her sister's.

A fine picture of Co. C taken by L. F. Wheeler on military square last Saturday is hung in the post office.

We received a pleasant call yesterday from J. E. Boyle, the gentlemanly advance agent of Doris' circus.

Mrs. L. M. VanTine and Mrs. Asa Rosacrans are spending a few days at Oscoda, as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Hicks.

Ladies, when in want of millinery goods, should remember that Mrs. M. A. Freeman has a very large stock on hand and she will sell very cheap.

Chas Everett has rented the Comfort Mill and will be ready for business after Saturday morning, and hopes all the friends of the old mill will give him their patronage.

Geo. R. Beardsell, of Hudson, and proprietor of the Lake View House at Devil's Lake, was in town last Tuesday. He says he expects to do more business than ever this year.

We are indebted to L. F. Wheeler for two fine views lately taken by him, one of S. W. Anderson's residence, and the other of the floral mementoes used at Mrs. Betts' funeral.

Rev. C. T. Allen, of Detroit, occupied the pulpit of the M. E. church last Sunday, both morning and evening. He gave two powerful sermons, which were listened to by large congregations.

A. H. Snow, of Winona, Minn., C. D. Keyes, of Grand Rapids, and Mrs. A. B. Cotton, of West Bay City, were in town Tuesday. They have been enjoying a few days visit at Clinton, having come to attend the reunion there, and availed themselves of the opportunity to call upon some of their Tecumseh acquaintances.

Rev. Wm. H. Babbitt, shaving just returned from an attendance at the meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church of the United States of America held at Cincinnati, Ohio, proposes to give some account of the proceedings of the meeting, at the Presbyterian church on Sunday evening next at 7:30. All are invited.

Ladies, do not fail to see the New Improved Sewing Machine Castors, almost as great a necessity as the sewing machine itself, for with it a sewing machine can be moved with scarcely an effort and in any direction. See them, examine them, have them attached to your machines, and see for yourselves their usefulness, as it prevents tearing of carpets, straining of machines, and the great tax upon the strength now required to move them.

W. T. Eccles & Co., have just purchased a handsome new covered wagon to use in delivering tea in the country. We dropped into the New York Tea store and were surprised at the immense quantity of tea packed up ready for shipment. They have shipped about 300 pounds this week around the country, and the orders are still coming in. Their tea gives universal satisfaction, as can be seen by the fact that not a pound has been returned by dissatisfied parties. They are also making a specialty of their 25 cent Java coffee, and their 50 cent tea can't be beat.

THE GREATEST OF ALL SHOWS COMING.

John B. Doris' New Monster Shows, united with the Great Inter-Ocean—Twelve Mammoth Shows combined—which comprises Triple Circus in Three Big Separate Rings, Megatherian Museum, Deep Sea Aquarium, Elevated Theatre Stage, and 50 Cage Menagerie, will make its appearance at Tecumseh, Saturday, June 20th.

This mighty aggregation is universally proclaimed the grandest tented exhibition in existence, and is familiarly besides reputably known throughout the entire country: and Mr. Doris, by his able management and millions of money, has placed before the public an honorable straight forward show. Truly fulfilling every advertised promise, positively ignoring all bombastic misrepresentation by presenting every proposition of reality and truth. By so doing, the New Monster Shows, consolidated with the Great Inter-Ocean, has commanded the respect and consideration of every intelligent reader, and we really mean every word in this article. The list of wonderful exclusive features is exceptionably large, and only a few of them can be mentioned. First and foremost is Krao, the Living Missing Link. Then the ponderous and Pioneer W. r Elephant "Betts," the heroine of over one hundred and fifty hard fought battles, and is one hundred and forty-one years of age. Acknowledged to be the oldest elephant in the world. Next comes the ferocious man eating lion-slayers, the only living pair ever beheld in captivity; huge herd of performing elephants; monster blood sweating hippopotamus; the only and great Egyptian bovalapus; human blood sucking vampires; grave robbing hyenas; royal Abyssinian lions; living marine monster; performing rhinoceros; royal Bengal tiger; large drove of Bactrian camels and dromedaries, etc.

The boy made his advent last Monday and weighs nine pounds. He will call Charley Heck "pa" some of these days. We would respectfully remind Mr. Heck that the HERALD boys smoke.

Mr. J. E. McCollum, of Clinton, made a general assignment last Thursday to Chas. H. Fisk, of Detroit, for the benefit of his creditors. There are no preferences and no secured debts. The liabilities are $4300 with assets nominal. The event will cause surprise and heartfelt regret among Mr. McCollum's friends. John E. is a most genial gentleman and a man of the strictest business integrity. Every one who knows him will deeply sympathize with him in his misfortune. He embarked in trade with but little capital, and the exceedingly dull times of the past few months has forced him to the wall. We hope some arrangement can be effected whereby he may be able to resume business.

FARMERS' SOCIAL CLUB.

The Farmers' Social Club convened at the residence of Mr. John Rector, Friday afternoon, May 29th. There was a fair attendance considering the season of the year, and after partaking of a bountiful repast the exercises, previously arranged for this meeting, were taken up and well carried out. The select reading was very appropriate for the time, and the essay brought out several points in our assessment laws not heretofore well understood by the most of the farmers. The discussion of the question, farm economy, was opened by Mr. A. G. Hall. Experiences in the use of farm tools were given and some new points demonstrated. The Club made arrangements for their annual picnic meeting at Sand Lake for Saturday, June 13th, at Putnams' landing. It is hoped that all of the members of the Club will be prepared to go and have a rousing good old time. The Club adjourned to meet at the residence of Mr. F. C. Rector the third Friday in October next at 2 P. M.

"A GIGANTIC SCHEME."

"A gigantic railroad scheme, and one which will contribute immensely to the development of the resources of Ohio, is under consideration by the syndicate which is now controlling the Columbus, Hocking Valley & Toledo railroad. It has but recently been developed that the Ohio Central railroad, which was sold a short time ago, was purchased by this syndicate. It has also come to light that they will purchase, if possible, a controlling interest in the Michigan & O. railway, which terminates in Toledo. Vice President Burke, of the Columbus, Hocking Valley & Toledo railway, is one of the heavy stockholders in this road, which is at present in the hands of a receiver, and will soon be sold. The road extends about 175 miles into Michigan, and, by extending it fifty miles farther, they will reach one of the richest lumber fields in the United States. These additions the new management propose to make if they can get control of the road. The immense advantages of such a system of roads is apparent at once. The large coal fields of the Hocking and the Sandy creek valley will be brought in direct communication with Lake Erie, Lake Michigan, and the state of Michigan, while the immense lumber fields of that state are brought in communication with the Ohio river, through the Ohio & West Virginia railroad, owned by the same syndicate.

SOME ADRIAN NOTES.

Business having called us to Adrian last Saturday we snatched a few moments to make three or four friendly calls.

We found Ex-county clerk Hunter in his new office, which is located in the rear of Prosecutor Salsbury's office and is a portion of the rooms formerly occupied by Merritt and Navin. He has a good location and is already booking some important briefs. He deserves success and will undoubtedly achieve it.

We found Bro. Stearns up to his eyes in business preparing to assume his new postoffice duties on Monday. He will now oscillate between North Winter street and South Main street. Although he may expect to be "rushed" with business, we predict that he will prove himself fully equal to the emergency.

Friend Beakes was found in charge of the Record sanctum, with E. J. Smith standing guard. If the readers of the Record are dissatisfied, with these two plumbago pushers at the desk, they certainly must be very hard to please.

We dropped in to inspect the new Times office which is located on South Winter street. Found Messrs. Appleyate, Fee and Larwill. Postmaster Fee was making due preparation to retire to private life, but the Times will be the gainer by the change. The new quarters are very convenient and commodious. A large counting room and press rooms on the ground floor; editorial and news rooms on the second floor. The steam power is located in the basement. The Times now has one of the best appointed newspaper offices in this section of the state.

James Cassady, of Dundee, was in town last Monday.

Adrian has an equestrian club with a membership of about twenty.

Three weeks more and we will have the longest day and shortest night.

Mrs. M. A. Freeman is daily adding new attractions to her already large stock of millinery goods.

Mrs. M. E. Conklin and Mrs. Sam Short left home last Tuesday morning for Jonesville to enjoy a few days visit with Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Bean.

Auction Sale.

Mrs. S. E. Henry will sell at auction at her residence, one-half mile south of Lake Ridge Hotel, on the Ridge road, Tuesday, June 16, 1885, at 12 o'clock M., the following property: Two hundred sheep, one horse rake, horse hay fork, and roller. Fairbank scales, double buggy, single buggy, self binding McCormick reaper, cutter, drags cultivators, hay forks, corn planters, etc. One mowing machine, together with a general supply of farm implements. Terms, 12 months on good notes bearing interest. Ben Reynolds, Auctioneer.

Regular council meeting. Present, The President, Messrs. Bresie, Cook, Adams and Hall. D. T. Hall appointed Recorder pro tem.

Mr. Cook reported a leak in the water pipes. A motion was made and carried that the fire committee make the necessary repairs. Also to complete plans for rebuilding, said committee to report at next regular meeting.

The Marshal reported verbally that Mr. H. H. Wood wished to remove an old house on his lot on Logan street to the back of said lot to use for a barn. Referred to the fire committee.

A MARVELOUS STORY

TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "Mr. Editor: Sir: New York, Nov. 1, 1882. Gentlemen: My father has been greatly benefited by the use of your Sarsaparilla, and I have seen such a marvelous effect from it in his case that I feel it my duty to make the fact known. Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

has had a marvelous effect upon my father. I think he had not left the house for at least two years. I did not know whether he would live or die. He was on the verge of the grave. From a few spoonfuls of your Sarsaparilla taken daily, it gave him an appetite, built him up, and he is now well and able to be about his business. I believe many lives might be saved by the use of your Sarsaparilla. Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is with pleasure and a feeling of duty to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the Sarsaparilla in April last, and have taken it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect. I can now attend to all my business, though I am upwards of 70 years of age. My neighbors, who witnessed my case, join with me in recommending your Sarsaparilla. Greenfield, Vt., Oct. 21, 1882. Yours gratefully, HIRAM PHILLIPS."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Pimples, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.

KEEP IT PURE.

The Life is the Blood—Present Disease—Surgery the Last Resort—A Telling Letter.

Here is a fact for you to think of. Medicine is a business. Druggists do not keep what they think will not sell. Patent medicines are a business, and they must sell to live. It is for the reason that single preparations of great merit are in range of competition, some of them appear as long as the world lasts. Now, when a preparation is put up in a form to cure the most common diseases, and also produce the best results in the majority of cases, it is a blessing. But while many things are good, there is little power, there which is claimed for it, and are neglected.

It is acknowledged that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y., is a meritorious preparation, now in use for all diseases arising from a foul or impure state of the circulation. Hence it is more than likely that if the following letter had appeared years ago, Favorite Remedy, ten years ago, he would never have suffered from cancer.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., March 24, 1881.

Dr. David Kennedy,

Dear Sir—About six years ago I was obliged to resort to external treatment for the removal of a cancerous growth on my lip. On my return home I became sensible that my blood needed a thorough cleansing. My whole system was in bad condition. While casting about for the best medicine to do this, your "FAVORITE REMEDY" was so highly recommended in my hearing that I resolved to try it. I did so, and the result proved to me it was fitted to purify and completely. I soon got over the depression produced by the operation, and since the "Favorite Remedy" with I have continued to use in small doses, has kept me in such good health and strength as I never had before, and expected to have. It is the best blood purifier in the world. I am sure of that. Yours, etc.,

MATTHEW FARRELL.

A CASE of unusual cruelty, involving a large sum of money, has been decided in the Surrogate's Court in Brooklyn, L. I. Some years ago Mr. Wright, a wealthy merchant of Brooklyn, died, leaving a will by which he bequeathed his property to his wife, who was his second wife, and to his children by his first wife. The will was contested by the children of the first wife, who claimed that the second wife had exercised undue influence over the testator, and that he was not in a condition of mind to make a valid will. The Surrogate decided against the contestants, and the decision was sustained by the Court of Appeals.

THE Commissioner of Pensions has prepared a bill for the relief of the Pension Agency at Louisville, Ky., and the Commissioner of Pensions, in a letter to the Chairman of the House Committee on Pensions, says that the present quarters are inadequate, and that the business of the agency is greatly retarded by the present arrangement. The Commissioner says that the Government owns a building in Louisville, which could be fitted up for the agency at a small expense, and that the rent now paid for quarters could be saved by the use of the building. The Commissioner says that the business of the agency is increasing so rapidly that a provision should be made for the enlargement of the agency.

IN A BOTANIST'S PARADISE.

The Puzzle Monkey Tree and a Flower as Large as a Street Gas Lamp.

My chief object in coming to Chili was to see and paint the old forests of Araucaria imbricata, known in England the puzzle monkey tree, rather unreasonably, as there are no monkeys here to puzzle; probably they crossed the Cordilleras in disgust at the general prickliness of all plants here, especially the araucarias, and never came back again. It was not easy to make out how to reach these forests; some people talked of difficulties and even dangers; they said I must sleep out, be eaten by pumas, or carried off by Indians, a noble race which has never yet been conquered by the white man; others declared the trees no longer existed, having all been sawed up into sleepers for railways.

It was a lovely ride from Angole and its terrible dust. First, we mounted over rocks and more dust for some 2,000 feet, among puzas and succulent and prickly plants (which prepare themselves for the long dry season by hoarding moisture and growing weapons of defense to prevent other thirsty creatures benefiting by it), and then leaving a glorious view of snowy volcanoes behind us, we entered the mixture of forest and pastoral scenery I have just described, passing stream after stream of clear running water and more lovely flowers than I had seen in all Chili before. The embothrium, or burning bush, was in full beauty, growing in long sprays of six or eight feet high, quite covered with the purest vermilion flowers formed something like honeysuckle. But I saw none grow into such a tree as I saw in my cousin's garden in Cornwall last year. Perhaps it may enjoy a new soil and climate and treat England as our common weeds do Chili. They have quite driven the natives out on the great plain or valley of Santiago, and show unbroken masses of camomiles, thistles, turnips and cornflowers far stronger than those of Europe. Near the streams were masses of huge gunnera leaves (whose stalks are eaten like rhubarb), lovely ferns with pink, furry stalks and young leaves, and a most exquisite scarlet flower, something like a mimulus, which dipped its roots to the running water and grew nowhere else. A small bamboo and many other graceful plants grew over these things, and overhead from the branches of the oaks a most beautiful lauranthus, with bright green leaves and pale green buds, changing as they opened to yellow, then turning orange, and becoming deep red before they dropped. The flowers were often half smothered in the gray lichen, commonly called "old man's beard," which waved in every wind and grew in masses on all the oaks. The beech had its own pet parasite, a tiny mistletoe forming perfect balls of every shade of green and gold, and over the bushes climbed many species of pea, lapageria, and lovely pink star flowers, which hooked themselves up by the long tendrils at the ends of their leaves, while some yellow stars seemed to have no leaves, only tendrils. Tall fuchsia trees were there, too, and oudlea with its golden balls, sweet as honey, and whose leaves when toasted and pounded form the popular cure for all wounds and sores. Another bush, called the pinche, looks like a lilac and white heath, and is said to be a cure for all diseases. The grass was in flower, quite red and lilac, and sprinkled over with exquisite scarlet lilies, alstrœmerias of many tints, tropæolum, and four species of orchids so handsome that I persuaded my host to send roots to Mr. Veitch. It seemed a shame that the Chilians (who do not appreciate native flowers) should alone possess such treasures.

Soon after reaching the first araucarias we found ourselves surrounded by them, and all other trees gave way to them, though the ground was still gay with purple peas and orange orchids, and many tiny flowers whose names I did not know, and which I had not time to paint then—such flowers when picked die almost directly. Many hills and the valleys between were covered with old trees, covering some miles of space, and there are few specimens to be found outside this forest. I saw none over one hundred feet high or twenty feet in circumference, and, strange to say, they seemed all very old or very young. I saw none of those noble specimens of middle age we have in some English parks with their lower branches resting on the ground. They did not become flat-topped like those in Brazil, but were slightly domed like those of Queensland, and their shiny leaves glittered in the sunshine, while their trunks and branches were hung with white lichen, and the latter weighed down with big cones as big as one's head. The smaller cones of the male trees were shaking off clouds of golden pollen, and were full of small grubs, which, I suppose, attracted the flights of parroquets I saw so busily employed about them. These birds are said to be so clever that they can find a soft place in the great shells of the cone when ripe, into which they get the point of their sharp beaks and fidget it until the whole cracks and the nuts fall to the ground. It is a food they delight in, and men, too, when properly cooked, like chestnuts. The most remarkable thing about the trees was the bark, which was a perfect child's puzzle of knobby slabs of different sizes, with five or six decided sides to each, and all fitted together with the neatness of a honeycomb. I tried in vain to find some system on which it was arranged.

The puza or chaguale was the other plant I wanted most to paint. One wretched specimen flowered at Kew last spring, and excited much attention, and I struggled to draw it in all the glare and discomfort of the cactus house, not venturing to ask that so precious a plant should run the risk of catching cold by being taken to my room there. Here there are three kinds growing in quantities, each in its peculiar locality. The largest has a yellowish green flower, and is seldom far from the seaside. Its proportions are those of a London gas lamp, the flower head even longer than the lamp, often over a yard long, and it is a most noble object when seen standing above its rosets of pine-like leaves, among the rocks and clifts, with the sky and sea behind it of that deep blue and purple one only finds among volcanic rocks. The blue variety grows further inland in the valleys and rocky clefts high up whole hillsides are often covered with it, and I have seen twenty-five flower stalks rising from one mass of leaves, which are silvery and most beautifully carved, like some of the bromelias, its cousins. I shall never forget the first time I saw them growing when climbing in search of them near the Baths of Aguaquindo; the clouds overtook me and hid everything for awhile, till I saw those tall flowers like ghosts close to me, then a snow peak far beyond, and then I got into a new world of wonders, with blue sky overhead and a mass of cotton-wool clouds shading all I had left below, and the strange puza flowers for company and plenty of time to study them. About sixty branchlets are arranged spirally round the central stem, each a foot long and covered with buds wrapped in flesh-colored bracts. These open in successive circles, beginning at the base; the three flower petals at first opening are of the purest turquois blue; then they become darker, a mixture of arsenic-green and Prussian blue; the third day a grayer green, and then they curl themselves up into three carmine shavings, and a fresh circle of flowers takes their place outside, so that the longer the plant has been in bloom the larger its head becomes, and as the heads of the spikes or branchlets bloom last it loses its form and looks ragged and disreputable. Its stamens shine like gold in their polished metallic blue caps, and it is marvelously beautiful at first. The third kind is smaller and its flowers thin and of a very dark blue, but its bright pink stalk is very effective when seen against the gray stones. The gum of the puza is valuable as a medicine and resembles gum arabic. Near the puza the tall cactus generally grows its pillars, often six or eight feet high, crowned with white trumpet flowers and buds, and ornamented with a parasite, whose white and scarlet berries are eatable. I found that the flowers never faced the same side as the parasite; the former were as large as a German beer-glass, and their foot stalk was full of sweet juice, most refreshing to suck on the dry hillside, and less stupefying than the usual contents of such glasses.—Chanlion (Chili) Cor. Pall Mall Gazette.

MODEL MAKERS.

One Business That Is at a Standstill and Exhibits No Improvement.

"There are not more than twenty shops in the city of New York devoted to the making of patterns or the building of models," said a pattern-maker to a reporter, as he stood at his lathe, turning a piece of wood. "The business does not seem to grow like other trades, and I must confess I am somewhat at a loss to discover the reason. You certainly would suppose that in a great metropolis like this inventors would be so plenty that pattern and model-makers would be kept busy all the time working out their ideas in wood. Inventors are, however, not quite so plenty as that. There are plenty of men who are always on the point of making a great invention, but somehow they never reach the successful issue.

"I have been in this shop thirteen years and during that time have employed a great many different workmen. My experience has convinced me that there has been no improvement whatever in the machinery used in my business over that of a quarter of a century ago. We use exactly the same tools as we did then, and do our work in the same manner. This, I suppose, sounds somewhat strange to you, but it is nevertheless an undisputed fact."

"Do you have any trouble in getting good apprentices?"

"Yes, we do. The young men who come to learn the trade are usually ignorant fellows who have received but little or no education. They are faithful in their work, and seem to want to learn, but their ignorance of the slightest mechanical principles is a serious drawback to their advancement. I have often wondered why it is that more of the bright boys who graduate from our public schools do not take up the skilled trades. There is a good field here for such workmen as they would make. Somehow the boys all prefer to become clerks in dry goods stores or horse-car conductors instead. The period of apprenticeship, while nominally three years, is really unlimited. A workman is learning something new all the time. There is no limit to the variety of work we are called upon to perform. A man comes in here and explains to me what he desires to construct. He has, perhaps, made no drawings or measurements, but he expects me, after listening to his descriptions, to go to work and make the pattern, or model, whichever it may be, without any further assistance from him. If we were called upon to construct the same pattern quite often, why then we might be able to improve our machines and tools. As it is now, we can never tell what we will make during the next twenty-four hours. Of course, a great many of our orders come from manufacturers. These are accompanied by the drawings and measurements, and are therefore more easily filled. Occasionally a crank comes in with a queer machine which he desires me to model. I usually tell such individuals that I have no time to do their work, and recommend them to some one whom I think will perhaps humor the crank's whims. Do we get good prices for our work? I have received as high as $100 for a model. It depends in a great measure upon the intricacy of the machine to be constructed. We pay our workmen from three dollars to five dollars a day."—N. Y. Mail and Express.

—There are at least a dozen species of fishes having electric organs. The electric eel of South American waters is the most powerful of creatures, growing to a length of six feet, and provided with a pair of batteries containing some hundreds of minute cells copiously supplied with nerves, which exhibit phenomena the same as those produced by artificial batteries.—Chicago Herald.

Poor Fellows

Prostrated, debilitated, enfeebled, they feel as if they were hardly worth picking up. They would hardly give life toss of a bright penny for a chance of a choice between life and death. But even such forlorn people can be renewed by the use of Brown's Iron Bitters. It vitalizes the blood, tones the nerves, and renovates the system. Mr. Isaac C. Weed, Burr's Mills, O., says, "I used Brown's Iron Bitter for general weakness, and it helped me greatly."

J., has received the unqualified endorsement of the medical faculty and of the thousands of invalids who have been won back to health by their use. For sale by C. A. Wright & Co.

ACHES! PAINS!

"I ache all over!" What a common expression; and how much it means to many a poor sufferer! These aches have a cause; and more frequently than is generally suspected, the cause is the Liver or Kidneys. No disease is more painful or serious than these, and no remedy is so prompt and effective as

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

John T. Clark spent Sunday in Blissfield.

Rev. Joseph St. John went to Detroit last Monday morning.

James Hause attended the funeral of Peter Waldron last Monday.

Thomas Matthews commenced running a milk wagon last week, and from the number of times we hear the tin horn, we should judge he has a large number of customers.

We are glad to see that James Hogan, who has had a severe sickness for several weeks, is now able to ride to town.

C. S. Burroughs 'comes to the front' with two new signs. The potato bug looks as large as life, and is very suggestive of what his race may do in the approaching season without the use of Paris green. (Inquire within.) The revolving mortar is quite a novelty in the way of signs and reflects much credit on the originator.

Mrs. Frank Graham who has been visiting here for a couple of weeks left last Tuesday for Brooklyn where she intends to make a short visit before going to her home in Buchanan, Mich.

Mrs. Almira Lancaster, who has been visiting in Clinton and Tecumseh, left here last Tuesday for her home in New Carlisle, Ind.

Mrs. Augusta Brooks intends having an auction soon for the purpose of disposing of some of her household goods. She is to have her house repaired and has engaged Ed. Semark to do the work.

The next Episcopal social will be held at the residence of J. E. McCollum, Thursday evening, June 18th.—All are cordially invited.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

The old time concert held at Napoleon Friday night, to aid in rebuilding the burned church of Brooklyn was well attended, and added fifty dollars to the fund created by selling what remained of the melted bell. Instrumental music was ruled out and members of the choir of forty-five years ago, took their cue from the long silent tuning fork. The result was a good time, and the Presbyterian church of this village is offered if they decide to repeat the program, which is probable. Remarks were made by Mr Blackmar, who said they selected him because they could not get Mr. Beecher, and being well acquainted with the sanitary condition of both villages he pointed out the necessity of erecting, over what he termed God's light house, because of our numerous plants of the Devils beacon lights. The good book says, "where evil doth abound grace doth much more abound," and we expect to shine by gospel glimmer in the near future.

A committee has been appointed to solicit subscriptions for the Soldier's home, but it is not known if they have begun work yet. They need not be afraid of wasting energy in pursuing such a work, and it is devoutly hoped if failure is made in securing a gratitude plant, that it can be fairly charged to distant parties.

The annual races begin this week, so that hubbub will be the rule, and quiet the exception.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Mr. & Mrs. L. Kniffin have returned from a week's visit to friends in St. Johns.

Old Mrs. Britton has gone to spend the summer with her grand-son at St. Johns.

Miss Flora Borden has gone to Nebraska to visit her brother.

J. Britton's new house is ready for the masons.

The Post Office is changed and now Ed. smiles.

Rauch & Newcomer have nearly closed out their stock.

Weather is fine—nights cool.

Geo. Gripton is the possessor of a freak of nature in the shape of a chicken with three perfect and well developed legs.

The owners of dogs better look after them nights for the men who have lost sheep say the law does not pay enough to make sheep-raising profitable.

Next Sunday evening will be observed with appropriate exercises, it being Children's Day. The program is full and interesting.

A prominent advocate of prohibition was seen the other day to give a friend a drink of liquor. Verily, prohibition prohibits.

Let everybody remember the concert given in Britton's Hall, by the Britton Band and Ridgeway Literary Society, Friday evening, June 12th. The program as rendered at Ridgeway has been changed and several new and humorous songs substituted. A good time is certain—come one, come all.

Farmers complain of cut-worms destroying all their corn and others cannot get theirs planted, the ground is so wet.

Dr. Hallock's new house is looming up finely.

The frame is up for the new school house and ready for the brick work. We are going to have a fine building. We understand our neighbor village is going to hold another school meeting to find out what to do with the one thousand dollars. That is right, when you meet vote it to build a school house and improve the town, as well as build up your village.

J. P. Beekler has a fine new barn. Yes, and there is Wm. Niverson's new house, and taking all things in consideration, we think the town is growing finely. Hotel is doing a thriving business. Stores a booming. Messrs. Rauch & Newcomer going to move to Monroe.

The Band is going to hold a celebration on the Fourth of July, in the shape of a Basket Picnic in the woods on the old Francis Coat's farm. Ice cream, lemonade and refreshments will be sold on the ground. Programs will be furnished soon.

TIPTON TOPICS.

Oh, the worm, the worm, the grubbing worm, he's one of a poor but numerous firm. By his industry he has caused much extra labor and annoyance to farmers, devastating whole fields of tender corn in a few hours. Who will devise a remedy to destroy this pest which seems to grow worse every year.

The wool crop is now being harvested.

Supervisor D. W. Love is reported seriously ill with brain fever.

Thos. Collin has returned from a six weeks' tour through the western States. He reports being very favorably impressed with the country in southern Kansas, and says the Oklahoma agitation is dying out. The boomers have moved their headquarters from Arkansas City further west to Winfield. He brought back samples of corn and oats of this year's crop taken from the farm of Hiram Learnard, fully a month's growth ahead of our crops of the same kind here. He seems to have improved his time in making observations in regard to the products, resources and prospects of the country, and states that if any one desires information, he can tell them all about it.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Almost a frost Monday and Tuesday night.

Farmers are busy fitting ground and planting corn.

DECORATION DAY AT RIDGEWAY.

Oration Delivered on that Occasion by Rev. James Wright.

Ladies, Gentlemen, Friends and Children; and to you the members of Eaton Post, No. 222, Britton.

We are here commemoratively assembled on this the 30th day of May in the year of Our Lord; one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, by an invitation given, through arrangements made in obedience to the rules and regulations of the Grand Army of the Republic, and in sympathy with a firmly established custom of the Posts of this Order, and the members of Women's Relief Corps, assisted by loyal citizens throughout the land, to engage in harmony with the multitudes that are now being assembled this day in the presence of God, and in the midst of the sleeping dust of the nation's honored dead, they are met commemorate with a touching service of song, speech, prayer and sympathy our fallen brothers who so heroically laid their lives upon the nation's alter, mid the din of battle in the last struggle of our beloved country, to obtain and maintain that which is so characteristic of America's friendly shores, free soil, free speech and free rights, to all her noble sons, and daughters too. In the past twenty years, how many of the Grand Army of the Republic, who lived to hear peace proclaimed, and returned home to enjoy the interests of home, to be with loved friends, who now sleep beneath the fresh and grassy mounds with their Comrades who fell in the nation's blood and battle? So fellow brother, in that Army, you are nearer to-day your fallen Comrades, while they have only gone just a little in advance of you: so the warning to you all is given, to be on the alert, that thou mayest be ready to go when thou art called in death to depart hence. To-day be ready! By this solemn service in which a reunited and patriotic nation participates, the Comrades of the Department of Michigan have been called upon to perform their full duty to their dead Comrades.

While the hum of industry should cease for a day on this the Decoration day, and anniversary upon which the graves of soldiers in the United States are decorated with flowers; as it is one of the days that is being much observed and cherished by the American people; let memory aid in recalling the days from '61 to '65. While reviewing the vivid scenes that were enacted on the march, here and there the wearied bodies were to be found while reaching the place of smoke and blood, all from hunger with exhaustion; and then the battle field with its crimson gore from the dead and dying soldiers in hospitals, where army surgeons were carving with the necessary treatments; and every thing in sympathy being done to save the life of the wounded and dying soldiers. Yet, still in our imagination at the prison pens let us stop; now see if you can give a picture of the scenes as you pass by, but indeed it is too terrible to think off. But as a nation to-day though solemnly associated in these Memorial services, wherein we recount of the sufferings and deprivations of those who live, with those whose dust lies under the grassy mounds; whose valor and patriotism for their country was worth more to them than even life itself, while they sacrificed the interests of home in the hour of the nation's peril that she might be saved to the Union; nevertheless, let us look up as American citizens and thank God that today peace reigns upon our fair and beloved country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Straits of Magellen, on the South, to the snow capped hills of Labrador, in the North. Yea more, we are in peace with all nations, thank God! Young men! Young women! And you Children! Your fathers, where are they? Does not the grave in the cemetery, or in the sunny South, speak to you saying here father lies, and he fell as a soldier for his country. And while the Grand Army of the Republic marches in review upon this day, so full of the memories of the past, who is there but can repeat the names of Comrades fallen, that the nation may still live in the blood of her honored dead; and as you passed by to-day, Comrades, Children, Young men, Young women, fathers or mothers, on each grassy mound where rests our brave heroes you have laid a wreath, planted a flag, dropped a tear, for their departure; in the strength of manhood mourn for their patriotism, and valor rejoice? To you gentlemen, to-day who represent the Grand Army of the Republic, in these days of our national prosperity and peace, those with us who have grown in these years of wonderful thrift and peace in our country to manhood are indeed unable to conceive of the honor due you, and those of your fallen brothers, in that, that in the darkest days that settled down upon our nation; then it was, that in your noble valor and patriotism under God, you saved to the Union; that which was rescued from the hand of the oppressor in Washington's time through the revolutionary soldier, when they said, "Liberty or death." But God gave liberty, yet, by the price of blood liberty was obtained. To me it is made clear in the second paragraph of the Declaration of Independence, why our country has been twice cleansed in the blood of her sons, which we do most devoutly pray that never again in this Christian country, will the cleansing thereof have to be done at the price of the blood of her sons. There ought to be salt enough in any Christian nation to keep pure that nation, without the use of cannon or sword. At this point, we quote you from the second paragraph of the creed of American Independence. Whereof: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that, whenever any form of government becomes destructive to these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such forms, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence, indeed will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and, accordingly, all experience hath shown that mankind are disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such a government, and to provide new guards for their future security." Blessed is that whose God is the Lord, however for the nation's security morally and politically rests alone in the moral purity of the people, one man can have just as much power to act in the welfare of this government as another: and verily, in the spirit of true manliness, each American citizen is called upon, even out of the inspiration that remains for each to be caught up with, that speaks to us out of the lives of the greatest and noblest men in the line of our fathers, who, "though being dead," they yet speak of the nation's richest treasure committed to our trust, the ballot box. Sons of American Liberty, as citizens of the United States of America, shall we be true to our nations richest trust, and in our country's strength maintain an honest ballot by casting our ballot out of a sense of duty? And let me ask, is not this one thing needful to-day? In this country of free born liberty, where the poor man should have just as much influence at the ballot box in electing the chief officer of these United States, as a Jay Gould or a William H. Vanderbilt; and what more can we ask than this of even true loyal American citizens, that our nation may ever be a nation whose God is the Lord of Hosts, he is our God; and we will worship at his feet, should be the motto from every interested human heart. But to you the Grand Army of Eaton Post, No. 222, of Britton, Michigan, and all you who hear this day, though in your immediate Post none may have fallen since last memorial day, while in the kind Providence of Almighty God, it is that you are spared to enjoy the associations of each other on this day, that enumerates to you of the memorials and memories of other days, years and associations. Nevertheless each memorial day reveals new vacancies somewhere within your ranks, and if not in your homes, there are new homes where the messenger has come with these words, "It is time—fall in—take your place in the ranks of the Grand Army above." To you who are here to-day, ere it may be said of any of you, as said of one, "while my servant was busy here and there, behold he was not." So, is there not added reason this day for the completeness of your work as upon any day, that when you are called to leave the Grand Army of the Republic, that you may be worthy to join the Grand Army above, because when your time has answered the end of its service under God, and to your country below, then will he whose right it is to say to you it is enough, come up higher, enter thou unto the joy of thy Lord. So while thou art manifesting zeal in lovingly caring for the orphans and widows, in honoring the lamented dead, be sure and remember the "one thing needful," thy duty to thy God, and to thine own soul. Many of those Comrades laid aside their armor in the time of war, others in the quiet peace of home; their task is done, and as they were true to duty, to their country and to their God, and faltered not where duty led them, even to the end, ever brave and true to the flag of their country. So may you that are in the Grand Army of the Republic, while some of you may be much nearer the river's brink that divides two worlds, than others, yet, to the river of death you all shall come; then what is there that more necessarily remains to be done by you that is of the most importance; other than this, that you fulfil all the obligations you have assumed. Then when the sun sets on Memorial Eve, its rays will fall upon a state, a nation whose patriot dead rests once more beneath the Stars and Stripes; then will come forth as a parting benediction to sorrowing hearts and homes, that have that day been tenderly remembered in word and deed, and when "on fame's eternal camping ground our silent tents are spread," and your names have again been added to the "silent majority" it shall be said you have not lived in vain. It is a truth that none dare to deny, the army of the dead is daily becoming larger, and the ranks of the living are being rapidly thinned, while time is diminishing the severity of those that mourn for the brave men who gave their lives that our country might live. The patriotic ardor and the sense of gratitude of our people have not been lessened, and the observance of the day set apart for the decoration of the graves of the fallen soldiers of our Union is yearly becoming more general throughout the country; and as the comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic, do annually continue to gather around the last resting place of the nation's illustrious dead, with hearts full of memories of fraternal ties which bind them together. To these ceremonies, in common with the many that are being conducted of like character and sympathy, noble and true-hearted citizens who have been invited are now present with the churches and sabbath schools of our land, that they may pay their tribute of respect to the memories of the men who sealed their loyalty with their lives. So may we enter to-day just upon the threshold of the land, to which your comrades have departed. While you again renew the pledges of fraternity, charity and loyalty which you gave to one another in the years that are past, and resolving to remain true to those pledges until you shall have been called to join the loved ones who have passed over to the Grand Army above. So finally in the active work of your order, you will ever find your principles, broader, purer and more devoted.

A SONG OF LIFE.

[illegible]

A VACATION.

How Rev. Mr. Elderberry Employed His Season of Rest.

Reverend Jonas Elderberry had preached in Flintville twenty years and had never had a vacation. Sickness and death had never laid him to rest a day, and he now, at fifty, and after much deliberation, not to say prayer, from acrimony, the church had decided on each of these occasions not to deduct anything from his salary, a concession which was thought very generous, as he received seven hundred a year, and the parsonage rent free. Some of his parishioners from other ways not so autocratic. Though a good man, Mr. Elderberry was not without ambitions and dreams. He sometimes wrote short articles in poetry which appeared in magazines and newspapers under the nom-de-plume of "Ed," and were pronounced by the editors "suggestive." So it was not strange that he often fancied himself and his little wife, Matilda, going on a vacation, and looking upon the mountains and the sea. But these dreams were like others he had indulged in, a pleasant glow which dissolved in the dull reality of an empty purse. He had saved a few dollars, to be sure, in his pocket, of owning a home of which he could speak positively as "my house." In his sober moments—and most of his life was very sober, indeed—he never expected to have any of these dreams realized.

Two months that had come to the parsonage had tried his infirmity, and perhaps that was the reason that there was almost always some one stopping there. All the cousins came, even to the fourth and fifth degrees, and cousins reduced to their lowest terms, so to speak, and the roundest hospitality cost something, in spite of the fact that Mrs. Elderberry was the maid of all work and so, now that adding the seven hundred a year, at a moderate guess five dollars from some editor, Mr. Elderberry's only bank stock was a few hundred in what was called, expressively, "back salary."

Flintville, though an old place, was little more than one long street, lined with white houses, well hidden from the road by honey-locusts and poplars. The Orthodox Meeting-house had received sundry coats of paint, but in other respects was just as it was the first time Mr. Elderberry entered it. The people were conservative, and the orthodox were the most conservative in the place, so they quietly ignored the smart little pale box called "The Church," which had sprung up on one side of them, and the squat brick building around the corner called the Hallelujah Chapel, and resisted innovations.

Rev. Julius Surplice, rector of "The Church," took a vacation in July, but as he was an unmarried man it was supposed he spent the time with his parents. As for the Chapel, its ministers came and went too often to need a vacation while in Flintville, as Mr. Elderberry read his sermons, it was known that he wrote them, but any male member of his flock, if asked his opinion of such labor, would have said: "It must be easy enough to sit in the house, and write things out of your head, if you have been to college." As for the women, while they considered sermon-writing too deep for the female mind, they yet considered it something of the nature of women's work, not a definite business, but an occupation to be taken up at odd moments, as knitting, or patchwork, when nothing more important was going on.

"Nature can not endure everlasting drooping" and Mr. Elderberry had twice asked for a vacation without success, when Mr. Whitaker, of Chicago, after doing something very sharp in corn, sent his wife to Flintville to visit her father, Deacon Billings. "I never heard of a minister's preaching through August!" she exclaimed, lifting her bejeweled hands. And the next Sunday the long-desired vacation was granted, although 'Squire Pogg opposed it, saying, if he hired a man to hoe corn, he did not expect him to skip every other row.

"Where shall we go, Matilda?" said Mr. Elderberry, the next morning.

"We!" exclaimed Mrs. Elderberry, tremulously. "It's your vacation, Jonas. I—I don't see how I can leave. There's the hens, and the house, and the missionary bed-quilt; and Cousin Alzina liable to come any day."

"My dear," said Mr. Elderberry, with full eyes, "If I go anywhere you shall accompany me."

Thursday evening came; but Mr. Elderberry had not succeeded in obtaining a cent from the "back salary." He had been asked exactly fifty-two times where he was going and when he would start; and there was in his pocketbook fifteen dollars and seventy-five cents.

"Tilda," he said, coaxingly: "Let's go and see Sister Martha."

Though Mrs. Martha Tucker had been like a daughter in Mr. Elderbery's father's house, she was the child of his mother's sister. She had been married five years when he married Matilda, and had soon afterwards visited them at the parsonage. When she had [illegible] Mr. Elderberry had always intended to go to see her. Her farm was forty miles away, across the hills, the stage fare was [illegible] considered, and his wife gently reminded his remarks [illegible] Without any [illegible] matter, he had [illegible] that Martha was prosperous, and was [illegible] for Martha was the only one of his congregation who had not demonstrated snow favored him.

"I don't want to go a-courting," [illegible] Mrs. Elderberry, with unconducive [illegible]

"You never had a chance," said Mr. Elderberry, dryly. "But I've [illegible] to marry you before Sunday. We will [illegible] a few days, and I think Martha [illegible]"

Mr. Tucker's desire to accumulate money, with his wife's desire to be known as a perfect housekeeper, had not been checked by childish fingers, and Mrs. Tucker's naturally unsympathetic temper had hardened into something very frosty, indeed. To unpin her mousseline, and have her chairs thrust into new places, alone all to have extra cooking going on, and her orderly plans frustrated, irritated her. If she had shown her cousins were coming, she would have scrubbed herself a little, but as it was, she saw them descend from the stage with ill-concealed dismay, and greeted them with the exclamation, "I declare!" "I wish I had brought my settee on the fulfillment of the law," said Mr. Elderberry that night to his wife. "Martha says that Zeland Valentiner preaches at East Gypsum. I remember him, and I think he keeps up his Hebrew." But the next morning Mr. Tucker hitched up his colt, and with his wife started for the next village three miles away. It was noon when they returned, so the absence of the settee on the law was of no consequence. In the meantime, the hired man's wife had gone out to visit the wife of the hired man, and, in her haste, left the kitchen door open. The cats took advantage of the opportunity, and hopped in quietly till the place was full of them. By some curious instinct, Mrs. Tucker divined their presence the moment she entered the house. "There's folks who wouldn't hear a whole menagerie in the next room!" she exclaimed, scornfully, after a vigorous use of the broom. "It's precious few times I've ever been away from home, but when I have, I've worked myself to sick an' bones!"

As before, Mrs. Elderberry was a very determined woman, and when she said that evening, "Jonas, I shall take the stage to-morrow for Flintville," her husband knew better than to oppose her. Two days afterward, when he had received to follow her, he received the following note from her:

"You must come, dear Jonas, to remain away from home the four Sundays in the Whitaker church for this week," says Mr. Jonas Elderberry, the pastor of that church, "I'm sorry, the pastor of that church is spending his vacation trout fishing. As other pastors can not, we know, enjoy this diversion, but yet each one draw near to Nature's heart in their enjoyment, in some pulpit to supply, this church has generously given him his pulpit.

"In the Friday Re-Chronicle the following appeared: We have understood from parties qualified to give accurate information on the subject that Rev. Mr. Elderberry, in consequence of some unusual circumstances, should expedite his return and cut short his vacation in the exercise of the peculiar art.

After spending the night in painful consideration, Mr. Elderberry determined to go to East Gypsum, and find a cheap boarding-place, where, free from the distractions that beset the parsonage, he might write out some verses that were singing in his head, and thus pay expenses. He had weeded onions all day Monday, and strained currants all day Tuesday, and felt that in a sense he had paid his board. But he was conscious that Mr. Tucker and possibly Martha felt that he was, as they phrased it, "living on them," and to remain longer was impossible.

"I s'pose you'll have a vacation every year, now your church has got started," said Mr. Tucker when Mr. Elderberry announced his intended departure. "You'd better come out in the country again. You can board cheap, or work for your board, if you want to. I'd take ye. I s'ud think 'twould do ye good to get up an' stir 'round after takin' it easy a year."

Arrived at East Gypsum, Mr. Elderberry was directed to the house of Mrs. Mullein, who, it was said, desired one more boarder. He was met at the door by an elderly woman, who proved to be Mrs. Mullein, Senior.

"Board? Yes. Professional man? Yes," said the old lady, in a high staccato voice, as she led the way up stairs. "We may suit, and we may not. Julia, my son's wife, gives lessons. P'raps you'll find out one these days what sons' wives are. When she ain't banging the piano, or the children ain't, the scholars are. The piano's just under this room."

She opened the door of a torrid chamber.

"There's two sets o' twins, and one odd, and they rampage all over the house. That's Julia's idea of government. The young man in the room back of this is learning the horn, an' when he's home—an' he alwa's is evenings—he practices, or reads out loud for his elocution. Probable you want a cool room? Hem! Well! This room'd bake an egg after dinner; fronts west, and there's a tin roof. Another one of Julia's ideas. Our price is eight dollars. I think she wants to rent this room, but you'd better come in later and see her."

Mr. Elderberry did not return to Mrs. Mullein's, and, after long wandering, found a little room in a house owned by two quiet spinsters. But the lot was narrow, and on one side was a melodeon and on the other were four girls and a dulcimer. In vain did Mr. Elderberry attempt literary composition. The melodeon wheezed, while the dulcimer kept up a monotonous: "Pink-a-punk-a-pink! Pink-a-punk! A pink-a-punk! A pink!"

When a week had passed, having only a dollar and four cents left, Mr. Elderberry set out for home on foot. He had on his old clothes, but the ministerial cut was unmistakable, and the old farmer who overtook him, asked, dryly: "Hev a lift, Elder? I'm goin' your way."

"Hev the dumbdest kind o' work a-gittin' help!" he grumbled, when Mr. Elderberry had accepted his offer. "An I've work for two men in the hop-yard, an there's a sight to contain an' explain to be passed fore they're ready for the pickin' fairly."

"I wish you'd have me go pick cucumbers," said Mr. Elderberry.

The old man laughed, incredulously, and then Mr. Elderberry told him his wish. The story at which the old man laughed again, and engaged him on the spot for a dollar a day.

When Mr. Elderberry returned to Flintville his cheeks were brown and his step was brisk, and he received many congratulations on the good his fishing excursion had done him. "Out Squire Pogg spent Thanksgiving with friends near East Gypsum, and the next week a column was wasted on the pastor.

"We consider you've brought disgrace on us all," said the Squire, severely, when he had detailed what he had heard. "The best thing you kin do is to resign."

When Mr. Elderberry had told the story of his vacation, and had explained that the money he had earned in the cucumber field had part of it gone to swell the church missionary accounts, the committee were mollified, but there was still a rankling feeling that he had disgraced the church. The winter passed, and spring was blossoming into summer, when Flintville was electrified by the news that Mr. Elderberry had a call to Gypsum Center, and was offered eighteen hundred dollars and a parsonage.

"It's all come of that old Seran he worked for on the Mile Strip, last summer," said Squire Pogg to Deacon Harp. "Seran's son's a deacon in the Gypsum Center Church. I seen the old feller last week, an' sez he, I never had a man on the place that put in the licks Elderberry did, sez he; an' when you want to drive your new preacher, Mr. Chubb, out o' town, sez he, send him up to me."

"M-yeh ah!" ejaculated Deacon Harp, with an expressive shake of his head. "If he can't go to his father's, or his father-in-law's, or—some'eres respectable, Mr. Chubb won't git no vacation."—Elizabeth Cummings, in N. Y. Independent.

INTRODUCTIONS.

The "Best People" at the Hub Setting Their Faces Against the Custom.

Our "best people" are setting the ban of their displeasure against the custom of introducing people to other people. The social lines, including guests who may be introduced to other guests, are very tightly drawn, and an invitation to people in good society to visit them does not by any means involve the probability of your becoming known to the other guests. This is not taken to mean that you are not at liberty to "scrape acquaintance" with any of the lordly guests if you choose to make the attempt, but simply that the hostess considers it no part of her duty to impose your acquaintanceship upon her other friends. There are some old families here, the bearers of pre-revolutionary names and pedigrees, who carry the absurd new notion to a ridiculous extreme. Many of these families are as poor as church mice, and have no little trouble to scrape along in their shabby gentility, but the way they hold up their social superiority is something truly agonizing. I heard a bright and cultivated young lady telling of her experience under one of these ancestral roof trees the other evening, and as she is sensible enough to enjoy the absurdity of the whole pretentious custom, it gives her friends no little healthy amusement. At a private musicale a few evenings since one of the young lady guests, who is a social favorite, as well as a remarkably fine amateur pianist, was approached at the close of a brilliant performance by one of the grand and unapproachable dames, who condescended to say: "You play very well. You really must ask some one to introduce you to me!" Needless to say, the presentation has not yet been made.—Boston Cor. Minneapolis Tribune.

A FEATHERED BACCHANAL.

Singular Accomplishment of a Milwaukee Canary Bird.

A tiny yellow-feathered canary bird stopped eating hemp seed and began cocking its head on one side, then scratching its bill with one claw, the bird began to sing in flute-like tones, "We Won't go Home 'till Morning." Every note was as true and prompt as a French music box. Despite the animated appearance of the songster, it was so unnatural to hear the roystering song of the bacchanals chanted by a canary, that the bystander looked suspiciously around to find the music box which was playing the tune. The bird belongs to L. D. Stebbins, the watchmaker, on Wisconsin Street, and he explained the modus operandi, by which the little songster acquired its surprising faculty.

He said that the bird had been bred by himself, being a common canary. The parent birds were chosen with reference to volume of voice and quality. "As soon as the bird was born," he said, "the education was begun. A mouth organ was the educator employed. Beginning thus early it was eight months before the education was completed. The bird can sing 'We Won't go Home 'till Morning,' faultlessly, but there its acquirements end. It has never heard any other song. That tune was played at the bird three times a day on an organ. It is a common canary, and is valuable on account of its superior education, inasmuch that I was offered forty-five dollars for it a few days ago. Ignorant common canaries sell for four dollars, which proves conclusively that there is nothing lost by educating them."—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

—The difference between an imitation and a genuine amethyst can be easily distinguished. Just put them on your tongue alternately, and you will find that the spurious feels warm and the genuine cold to the touch. The stone which has had the greatest run of late is tiger-eye, which has a peculiar, dull fire. It is only a piece of petrified wood, turned, smoothed and polished.—N. Y. Herald.

WARREN LELAND,

whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the

Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel, had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used

for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

WHAT WILL convince you of the wonderful curative properties combined in HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA, if the remarkable cures that have been effected by its use fail to impress upon your mind this repeatedly proven fact? Thousands are using it, and all declare that it is a medicine possessing all and even more than we claim for it. My friend, if you are sick or in that condition that you cannot call yourself either sick or well, go and get a bottle of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA, and realize yourself how this medicine hits the right spot, and puts all the machinery of your body into working order.

WILL CONVINCE

From the Registrar of Deeds for Middlesex County, Northern District.

LOWELL, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—It affords me much pleasure to recommend HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. My health has been such that for some years past I have been obliged to take a tonic of some kind in the spring, and have never found anything that hit my wants as your Sarsaparilla. It tones up my system, purifies my blood, sharpens my appetite, and seems to make me over. Respectfully yours,

J. P. THOMPSON.

One of our prominent business men said to us the other day: "In the spring my wife got all run down and could not eat anything; passing your store I saw a pile of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA in the window, and I got a bottle. After she had been taking it a week she had a ravenous appetite, and it did her everything. She took three bottles, and it was the best three dollars I ever invested."

Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Sold by all druggists. Price $1 a bottle, or six bottles for $5. C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

THE BARTHOLDI STATUE.

Present Condition of the Pedestal and How the Statue Will Be Erected and Anchored.

General Stone, Engineer-in-Chief of the Bartholdi Statue pedestal, was interviewed as follows yesterday:

"What is the present state of the work on the pedestal, General?"

"You are aware that the foundation mass of twenty-three thousand five hundred tons of concrete, was finished last year in May, and the building of the pedestal proper, of granite and beton, was commenced. That work continued until the funds were nearly exhausted and the cold weather came on, when building ceased and work was carried on only at the quarries, where we continued to get out and cut the granite. When work ceased in building the pedestal was up to the ninth course of masonry. There will be forty-six courses of granite in the finished pedestal, so there are thirty-six courses yet to build."

"Is any of the stone prepared?"

"Oh, yes. A large quantity. Three courses are already at Bedloe's Island, ready for setting, while at the quarries at Lute's Island, there are five courses dressed all ready to ship, and five courses on which the cutters are at work; so that in a short time the stone for one-half the height will be ready for setting."

"The statue, it is said, is made of sheet copper. What will hold it in form when set up, and how will it be attached to the pedestal?"

"Inside the sheet copper will be a very strong framework of wrought iron, consisting of four large angular pillars braced with iron from bottom to top. This iron structure is to come from France with the statue, and weighs about one hundred and twenty tons—much more, in fact, than the statue itself.

"This iron framework will rest upon and be attached to two strong steel girders, which we will place on the top of the pedestal, and these two girders will have two others directly under them at right angles. About sixty feet below the top of the pedestal there will be two other pairs of steel girders, which will be connected with those on top by steel eye-bars, so that the girders which support the weight of the statue and its framework will be anchored to the masonry and held securely by the weight of the pedestal itself."

"What is the extend of the steel work?"

"The weight of the steel system will be about one hundred and fifty tons."

"What is the necessity of such strong attachment?"

"The statue, while colossal in size, is by no means correspondingly heavy. While one hundred and fifty-one feet high, it, with its interior framework, weighs only about two hundred tons; but it has great surface—nearly four thousand square feet—exposed to the wind. With a strong wind blowing on this great surface the tendency would be to overturn the statue, and in such an effort the wind, since the center of gravity is more than sixty feet above the top of the pedestal, would have the advantage of great leverage. In case a violent gale should strike it, a cyclone such as has been known at Mount Washington and in many parts of our country, the wind effort to overturn the statue would be nearly seven thousand foot tons. Now, the weight of the statue resting on a base of only forty feet square would not by any means suffice to overcome this effort of the wind, and it becomes necessary to attach the weight of the statue to the weight of a great mass of the pedestal. This is accomplished by the system of support and anchorage which I have described. This system has been so devised that it will be always accessible in all its parts, so that it can be watched and kept constantly in good condition."

"How will the statue be lighted when completed?"

"Instead of having lights streaming from the diadem as was first proposed, I would prefer, should it be found practicable by electricians, to have electric lights placed, with strong reflectors, around the foot of the statue, casting a very strong light upon it, and thus giving it the appearance during the night of a shining statue. Then I would like to have a great vertical beam of electric lights spring from the top of the uplifted torch. Such a beam of light would strike upon the lower stratum of clouds, and its reflection, when even light clouds are over it, could be seen far out to sea and at a considerable distance inland where mountains do not intervene."

"What do you think will be the impression made by the work when completed?"

"I think that it will be by far more grand than any of us can well conceive until we shall actually see it. There is nothing of the kind in the world at present with which we can compare it. Even the site chosen for the monument is such that it will appear as if all had been constructed by man, even the island, for the sole purpose of presenting in beautiful artistic form the grand idea that 'Liberty enlightens the nations of the world.'"—N. Y. World.

Julienne Soup.

I have just learned the origin of Julienne soup. At the time of the French revolution there was a famous hostelry, called "Restorator," on Milk street, Boston. It was kept by a Frenchman named Julien, who first had the notion of selling food in hermetically sealed cans. On his return to France he sold his patent to the Cafe de Paris. The vegetable soup retained his name.

Simple as it looks, this soup is not so easy to brew. The stock must be pure and thoroughly distilled. The herbs must be fresh and succulent. A bowl of Julienne ought to suffice for any man's luncheon. Corot, the famous landscape painter, after working hard the whole forenoon, would have a dish of Julienne brought to him. He delighted to see the cubes of rosy carrot and the filaments of green asparagus floating on the amber surface.—Montreal Gazette.

Brought Home a Wagon.

Louisville, Ky.—Mr. J. Helmus, Vice President of the City Brewery, was brought home in a wagon, carried up two pair of stairs by two of his men and laid on the bed. He was suffering with a severe attack of rheumatism contracted in the ice vaults of the brewery. He refused to have a doctor, but dispatched a servant for a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, with the result that in one week he was entirely cured and able to return to his desk.

Ohio boasts of more colleges than any state in the Union.

Thousands Say So.

Mr. T. W. Atkins, Girard, Kas., writes: "I never hesitate to recommend your Electric Bitters to my customers, they give entire satisfaction and are rapid sellers." Electric Bitters are the purest and best medicine known and will positively cure Kidney and liver complaints. Purify the blood and regulate the bowels. No family can afford to be without them. They will save hundreds of dollars in doctor's bills every year. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by C. A. Wright & Co.

It Will Cure You!

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood if pure makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

It is asserted that about a third of the banking done in the world is done in the British empire.

C. A. Wright & Co. wish to make an assertion, which they can back with a positive guarantee. It is all about Acker's Blood Elixir. They claim for it superior merits over all other remedies of its kind, and guarantee for it a positive and sure cure for Rheumatism, Syphillis, and all blood disorders. It frees the skin from spots and disease, and leaves the complexion clear. Ask them about it.

The Bible has been translated into Zulu language.

C. A. Wright & Co. would specially recommend to the ladies Acker's Dyspepsia Tablets. As a laxative they have no equal. They are guaranteed to cure Chronic Constipation, Dyspepsia, and all diseases arising from a deranged stomach. With a free use of the Tablets, Sick Headache is impossible.

A bowl of good pea soup is as satisfying as a hearty dinner on a cold day. To make a gallon of it, wash a pint of peas and soak them over night; then boil in five pints of water, gently simmering three hours or so, until thoroughly soft. With a potato-masher rub the soup through a colander or wire sieve. A pound of beef or ham bone may be boiled with the peas. The soup may be seasoned in various ways—with onions, cloves, pepper, etc.

ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES CLOTHES.

Wash as you please, and it will make you its friend. Soak, boil and don't rub; or soak, rub and don't boil. We advocate dispensing, so far as possible with the washboard, because it wears the clothes out and wears you out. The soap contains no mineral to give it weight, and no pulp to give it size; therefore, frequent boiling will not yellow or injure the clothes, but soaking and boiling with ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP does clean and disinfect them. One thing is certain: it produces glorious results, is an economical soap and is so pure and harmless that the writer washes his head with it without injuring a hair, and he isn't bald either. Try it in the Laundry, Kitchen and Bath. Ask your grocer for it and take no other.

Baxter, Deerfield township, Lenawee county, against the drain commissioner of Blissfield, an adjoining township, for being assessed for the construction of a drain in his own township ordered by a person not living in the township has been decided by the supreme court. Justice Campbell says that no township corporation has power to tax another township. To allow one township, or its officers, to meddle in the management of public interests in others, or levy taxes against them or their people, would be a subversion of their independent character. The powers granted, if belonging to the respondent, are a direct and immediate interference with the independence of other townships and an exercise of some of the most important governmental powers of the state over the people and municipalities which have no voice, direct or indirect, in the election or appointment of the functionary exercising it. Such a grant to a local officer is too repugnant to our political system to find support anywhere. Two townships cannot govern the same territory. The action of the commissioner of Blissfield, so far as it affected the plaintiff in Deerfield, was wrong, and the proceedings to that extent were quashed.—Evening News.

FAILURE OF SEED CORN.

MR. EDITOR:—I notice in your paper as well as in several others, many failures of seed corn to come up; and this the greater pity, because it is a matter so easy to be avoided in almost all cases, for it is a simple operation for farmers to have sound, sure seed corn, and also to secure the best kinds taken in season, and now is the best time to think of and prepare for it as I did for many years, and as they do in Genesee County with success.

When the corn is eared out to full size, while yet green, go to the field, seek out those stalks having two or more good long ears filled out to the tip end, as well as those that seem to be the earliest and possess other desired good qualities; mark these stalks and hills in some way so that they may be distinguished and gathered separately when ripe; this will secure the best, earliest and prolific sorts for seed. Gather the ears in the husk, breathe them up by the husks in bunches of two or more ears, hang them up where they will not suffer from moisture, and also where they will not freeze, and you will have seed corn that will not fail to germinate and come in season; soak in salt brine over night and roll in lime to dry the seed for planting; it will come up four to six days sooner and grow faster and more evenly and more free from insects.

The proceedings of the Swamp Raisin drain have been quashed by the supreme court. The law was strictly complied with by the commissioner, the decision probably being on its unconstitutionality. The drain cost over $8,000, a large proportion of which was due to men who worked out the dirt, and who will now go unpaid.—Blissfield Advance.

Another pioneer has gone to his final reward. Amos Stocking, after an illness of several months, died on Sunday last, at the advanced age of 84 years. He came to Tecumseh in August, 1828, and has been a resident of the village ever since that time. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. W. H. Babbitt, on Tuesday afternoon at the family residence. His son, A. D. Stocking, arrived from Ligonier, Ind., last Saturday just in time to see his father alive. A fitting obituary notice, by a friend, will appear in next week's HERALD.

Morenci Observer: The removal of some siding from S. T. Snow's house, the other day, brought to light a well-preserved copy of the Northwestern Christian Advocate of Chicago, dated January 11, 1860, and with the name of W. D. Page written on the margin. It is a broad seven-column folio, and its editor was T. M. Eddy, D. D., a cousin of the late E. D. Allen. We have read the able editorials and other matter of this old paper with no slight interest. In its market report wheat is quoted at 99c. to $1; oats 35c. The then important subject of human slavery is discussed from the abolition standpoint in an article by W. E. Bigelow, of Tecumseh.

We inadvertently stated last week that Bidwell's grey team drew the floral car on Decoration Day. Our informant was mistaken. The team belonged to N. M. Sutton, and we cheerfully make the correction. We believe in giving credit to whom credit is due.

Adrian Record: County Clerk Bixby is busily engaged in indexing the marriage records of the county. It is a work of some magnitude, as the records running over a long term of years have never been indexed. The records are compared with the originals and corrections made in the names before indexing. The system of indexing is such that by a minutes' search one will be able to find the record in any marriage ever recorded in the clerk's office.

The report that the sextette band has consolidated with the cornet band is entirely without foundation, as the boys intend to stick together, purchase new instruments and have a first class band. They have been invited to be present at the opening of the new hotel at Devil's lake when finished and will probably accept. The nearest approach to a consolidation is that Mr. Knapp, the leader of the sextette, has been engaged by the cornet band as their instructor.

Last Friday afternoon a picked nine from around town and the High School nine met at base ball park to engage in a match game of ball. The high school nine was re inforced by several players from town, with H. McNair and B. Simons as the battery. The picked nine put up Jim Stevens and Al. Heidenrich as their battery. The boys played very well considering the small amount of practice had, the picked nine making 16 runs, 6 errors, 10 base hits with 2 two baggers. The high school nine made 5 runs, 15 errors and 2 base hits.

The Hudson races take place next week, June 17, 18, and 19.

Mrs. Spaulding has the finest display of flowers at her green house, ever seen in our village, comprising many choice and valuable plants. We are glad to note that she is receiving many orders from abroad as well as home. She deserves patronage for time and energy to please all who love beautiful flowers.

St. John, of Kansas, has been engaged by the temperance people to make several addresses in Michigan, commencing in Buchanan, Friday, June 12th; at Albion, Saturday, 13th; Jackson, Monday, 15th; Eaton Rapids, Tuesday, 16th; Hillsdale, Wednesday 24th. There is a probability of an excursion from Adrian to Jackson next Monday. Fare for round trip $1.25. An effort is making to secure him for a meeting at Tecumseh on the 25th or 26th.

H. L. Jones has exhibited in this office specimens of canned fruit and vegetables, including strawberries, cherries, grapes, peaches, whortleberries and peas, canned by a new process which does not require the fruit to be cooked. The fruit and vegetables are thus left in their natural condition, and will keep equally well in jugs and crocks, it not being necessary to seal in air tight cans. Mr. Jones has samples of the fruit at his office, which our citizens, and especially the ladies, are invited to call and examine. Family rights to use the formula can be obtained of Mr. Jones for $1. All the ingredients are pronounced by physicians to be entirely harmless, and can be obtained of any druggist at a cost of less than one cent per quart of fruit.

These will be followed by a supper, to be concluded with the usual toasts and responses. The program will be enlivened with good vocal or instrumental music.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

At the last meeting of Beer's Post G. A. R. the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas in the Providence of God, He has seen fit to remove from our midst our friend and comrade, Harris McDaniel, therefore while we sincerely deplore the loss which we as a Post have sustained by his death, do at the same time meekly bow to the dispensation of the Supreme Commander of the Universe, knowing that He doeth all things well. Therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of Harris McDaniel we have lost a faithful and true comrade, a brave and efficient soldier and our country a devoted and patriotic defender.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the widow and family of the deceased in their hour of affliction.

Resolved, That the chart of Beer's Post, G. A. R. of Tecumseh, Mich., be draped in mourning for thirty days, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, and to the Tecumseh papers for publication.

THE TOLEDO ART LOAN.

The Art Loan, the first one ever attempted in Toledo, will open its doors at Mabley's Rink, Monday, June 22, and continue one week. The Association has secured for this exhibition 75 or more of the best works of the most celebrated artists of the United States collected by the eminent artist, Mr. Frank C. Bromley, of Chicago, together with the masterpieces of Chase, Sellinger, Eastman, Johnson and others of the east, with fifty or more generously loaned by the citizens of Toledo. There will also be some of the old masters' productions, notably Michael Angelo, T. R. Robot, Angeleja Kauffman, and others. In addition to the works in oil there will be a large collection of water colors and etchings, the Smith collection of bronze and statuary from Detroit and beautiful and interesting collections of bric-a-brac, decorative art work, antiques, etc., etc. The exposition will be the most extensive and of more interest than any ever given in northern Ohio. Mabley's beautiful rink will be open all day and till 10:30. Tickets of admission 25 cents; tickets of five admissions $1.

THE LIBRARY LECTURE COURSE.

The Stewart Roger's entertainment on Friday evening last, completed the Library Course. Mr. Rogers was greeted with a good audience, and his program was most favorably received. He is a master of mimicry and possesses a wonderful power of facial expression. These traits, united with a full toned and finely cultivated voice, make him the leading impersonator now on the American platform. His changes of character are made in a few seconds, and in the presence of the audience, thus avoiding the tedious waiting between scenes which is customary in entertainments of this kind.

After figuring up the receipts and expenses of the entire course, the committee have a net surplus on hand of $2.35; hence no assessment will be required to meet the expenses of the course. Considering the disadvantages with which the committee have had to contend, this result is both unexpected and gratifying. Every evening but one, on which an entertainment occured, was stormy. Twice have the committee been disappointed outright. It is safe to say that these untoward events entailed a loss of at least $50, and possibly $100. Under favorable circumstances the course would have netted a handsome profit.

The committee of the Library association having the course of entertainments in charge consisted of A. W. Mills, O. P. Bills, Dr. R. B. House, Mrs. H. S. Lee and Mrs. C. A. Wright. Most of the work devolved upon the two first members of the committee and especially upon the chairman, Mr. Mills. The Library association and the public owe him a debt of thanks for his disinterested services in their behalf. He should be kept in the same position next season.

G. A. R. RIVER CARNIVAL.

Extensive preparations are in progress by Forsyth Post and Forsyth Relief Corps, of Toledo, to give an entirely new and novel entertainment on Wednesday, June 17, the Anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill, for benefit of the Relief Fund, which is used to care for the needy and destitute families of old soldiers. It is expected that four of the U. S. War Ships in service on the lakes will be present and participate on that day. This will afford a splendid chance to see four of our Nation's guardians, doing duty on our inland seas. The following is an outline of the program:

From 10 to 12 M.—Reception on board the U. S. War Ships in the harbor; reunion of old soldiers, shandshaking, etc.

At 12 M.—National Salute.

2.00 P. M.—Address of Welcome.

2.30 P. M.—Grand Chorus by pupils of Toledo Schools, in charge of Prof. Bennett.

3.30 P. M.—Cantata, by the Children.

From 3.30 to 9.00 will be filled with constantly changing features, all of which are attractive and entertaining. The following are the leading attractions: Boat Races; Target Practice; Band of Gypsies; The Alhambra Club; Wandering Minstrels, Jarley's Wax Works; Famous Bells and Chimes of the World; Twilight Glee Club; Tableaux; Oriental Booths; Madame Planchard and Blind Girl. Dancing will be indulged by those who enjoy the "light fantastic."

A Naval Battle at Night. The most thrilling and exciting feature of the program will be a naval engagement between at least three gun boats on the river and forts and batteries on shore, and must be seen and heard to be appreciated. This will take place on the river, opposite the Island, from 9 to 10, and can be seen by those on the island. No one should miss seeing this exciting scene.

A Grand Display of Fire Works will take place on the river in the evening.

A Model of Bunker Hill Monument will be erected, and the island decorated and lighted at night with the magnificent Electric lights. Every provision will be made for the pleasure and enjoyment of all who come.

A special train will be run over the M. & O. road that day to accommodate those who wish to attend. This train will leave Tecumseh at 9.32 A. M. Fare for the round trip $1.10. Fare from Ridgeway $1.00. Returning, the special train will leave Toledo at 11.00 P. M.

A CARD

A report having been in circulation that a mistake had been made in some medicine bought by us from Baker & Hall, we wish to correct such an impression, if still existing in the mind of anyone.

The result of the post mortem examination with the chemical analysis made by Prof. Prescott, of Ann Arbor, to whom we sent the medicine, shows the slightest suspicion of a mistake to have been entirely unfounded, the medicine containing nothing except what was ordered by us.

PROF. PRESCOTT'S LETTER.

Mr. Wm. Chiverall: Dear Sir, Your letter and package came this morning. I have made as careful an examination as possible. The mixture contains molasses, sulphur, magnesia and cream tartar.

I am not able to find anything else. A more extensive analysis with the molasses present would take a good deal of time. I analyzed especially for articles that would cause constipation, but have found none.

Yours,
A. B. PRESCOTT.

To the kind friends and neighbors who assisted us in our recent affliction, we would tender our most heartfelt thanks.

VESUVIUS.

Truthful William on a Renowned Mountain in Italy.

The study of the habits and temperament of the volcano at a distance of about ten thousand miles is one that has always afforded me much pleasure. In watching and noting the peculiar phenomena of the eruptions I have almost lost sight of its attendant dangers.

A volcano is always feverish and restless till after the eruption, then it feels better. The first symptoms of an eruption are cold feet, bad dreams, bad breath, and dark circles around the crater. This will be followed by an uncomfortable feeling in the bowels of the earth and a fluttering pulse. The volcano is then about to erupt, and those who live near had better sell out at a sacrifice.

One thousand eight hundred and eighty-four years ago the Roman geographer and weather crank, Strabo, spoke of Vesuvius as a burnt mountain; but it had not at that time turned itself wrong side out. Quite a forest grew where its crater now stands. For fifty years Vesuvius had bilious spells, but kept on drawing its salary without loss of time, but in 79 A. D. it turned itself loose and tore up the ground a good deal. Real estate was to an astonishing height, but became depressed at once. The south half of the mountain was jerked loose, as Pliny has it, and knocked galley-west. This was followed by a shower of hot, wet ashes, which obliterated Pompeii and Herculaneum. Those towns have been exhumed lately; but, owing to criminal delay of the authorities in doing so, no lives were saved.

These cities are not covered with lava. Scientists say that the ruins were found under a deep layer of volcanic tufa. I do not know what tufa is, but presume the term is perfectly proper and safe to use in good society. I have heard of the tufa cigar, which is sold at the rate of tufa five cents, but I am comparatively ignorant of the general appearance of volcanic tufa. This a joke that I thought of myself. Times are so close this winter that I am obliged to originate a good many of my own jokes and to write my own autographs. My amanuensis, who has stood by me so long and aided me so well, has been discharged. Autograph hunters will notice that my autographs are not so good as when I had my amanuensis.

For nearly one thousand years Vesuvius then remained in a comatose state, with only an occasional eruption. Then for five hundred years it did not erupt. In 1538, on the shores of the Gulf of Baiæ, in the Bay of Naples, a new and attractive crater was opened. It was a good, easy-running crater, and the lava was hot when it came out. Hot lava is not good for food. It hardens in the stomach and taints the breath with the odor of sulphur.

In 1631 Vesuvius itself again became intensely irritable and showed signs of a morbid desire to erupt. During the fifteen hundred years of quiet the crater had been covered over with forests infested by the wild boar of Italy and the tame bore of England. The slopes of the mountain were cultivated up to the foot of the cone, and Sunday school picnics swarmed over the green swards at its base.

Suddenly, in the latter part of December, Vesuvius rose on its hind feet and painted Rome red. All Southern Europe and a part of York State was covered with ashes and debris from the internal economy of the volcano. Many people were killed who had never previously lost their lives. The way Vesuvius slung hot mud at the Neapolitan hordes that fall was a solemn warning to the puny pushers of putrid politics in the land of the free and the home of the brave. The beautiful cities of Resini and Postici were entirely destroyed, and those of Torre del Greco and Torre dell' Annunziata would have perished if they had not spread the names of the towns over themselves and escaped. A good long name in Italy is rather to be chosen than great riches.

About every ten years since the above date, Vesuvius has been liable to jar the country and shake down a few towns, covering the people with stuff that is entirely useless. The eruption of Vesuvius is a fine sight at night. No doubt that there will always be more or less apprehension on the part of speculators until some American "rustler" puts a damper in the crater of Vesuvius, so he can regulate the eruption. At present those spasms are too irregular and too vehement.—Bill Nye, in Ingleside.

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

How Charles Morgan Became a Commodore Through Jefferson's Influence.

Colonel Wintersmith, of Kentucky, told the following good story of Thomas Jefferson at the Ebbitt House last night. I don't think it has ever been published:

Said he: "One day when Thomas Jefferson was riding through Virginia on his way from Washington to Monticello he came upon a boy trudging along with his clothes in a satchel, which hung on a stick from his shoulder. He stopped his gig and asked the young man if he did not want to ride. The youth looked at him a moment in a bold way, and finally said yes. He was motioned to get in, and in a moment he was sitting by the side of the President, who opened the conversation by asking him who he was and where he was going. He replied that his name was Morgan, and that he was going home from school, and continued by putting the same questions to the President, saying: 'I beg your pardon, stranger, but what might your name be?'

"The President replied, 'My name is Thomas Jefferson.'

"The boy looked up astonished, and asked, 'Not Tom Jefferson, President of the United States?'

"'Yes,' replied Jefferson, and as he did so the boy jumped from the gig and into the road, saying, 'I have heard of you, Tom Jefferson. My father says you are a rascal, and wouldn't he thrash me if he caught me a ridin' with you! Father knows you, and he thinks you are the biggest scoundrel in the country!'

"'No, he doesn't,' replied the President. 'I know him very well. We are good friends personally, though not politically. He won't care if you ride with me. I am not a bad fellow; get in.' Still the young man refused to get in. He reiterated the statement that he believed Jefferson to be a rascal, but finally was persuaded, and again took his seat in the gig.

"During the conversation which followed Jefferson succeeded in making a friend of him, and on parting told him that if he would come to Washington he would give him an office to prove to him that he was his friend. 'No, you won't,' said the boy. 'You will forget me.' 'No, I will not,' answered Jefferson, and with that the two parted.

"Some months afterward young Morgan, becoming disgusted with things about home, concluded to run off and go to Washington after his office. He stole out one night with his clothes in a bundle on a stick over his shoulder and walked to Washington. When he got to the city—it was nothing but a muddy village then—he was covered with dust, and his boots were the color of clay. He went, however, just as he was, up to the White House, and finding the door open walked boldly into a room where he saw Jefferson writing, bending over a table. He went up to him, and laying his hand on his shoulder, said: 'Hello, Tom Jefferson; I've come after that office!'

"The President looked up, but could not remember the boy. Noting his amazed look the young Morgan continued: 'There, I told you you would not remember when I came here.' Jefferson replied that his face was familiar, and on Morgan telling who he was the President greeted him kindly and asked him to be seated. He then called a servant and sent the boy off to be brushed up, asking him if he had another suit of clothes to which he replied he had. He was then given a room in the White House, and the President told him to look about for a few days and see what kind of office he wanted. This young Morgan did, and at the end of the first day he told Jefferson he believed he would take a colonelcy in the army.

"President Jefferson laughed, and told him that the colonels were always old men. He must take something else, but not to be in a hurry, to look around and see the city. He then sent a midshipman with him to make things pleasant for him, and in a day or two young Morgan decided that he would rather be a midshipman than anything else. Jefferson at once gave him the appointment, and he went on a ship immediately. He made a splendid naval officer, and he died a commodore."—Washington Cleveland Leader.

CREDULITY.

A Notable Consultation With Somnambulists in France.

Credulity, a belief in somnambulists, and so on are to be met with not among the uneducated classes alone, as is proved by a case connected with the authenticity of an alleged historical document, which latterly engaged the attention of the Paris Tribunal of Correctional Police. The complainant, who described herself as a descendant of a Governor of India under Louis XV., had in her possession a document showing that in 1737 her ancestor had deposited a treasure of forty million francs in his castle of Vilcoq. She took a certain M. Robert into her confidence, and, neither of them having means of their own to carry on researches, two persons were persuaded to advance money on condition of receiving a portion of the treasure when recovered. M. Robert set to work, found the precise spot where the Chateau de Vilcoq had formerly stood, and obtained the consent of the Marquise de Civrie, to whom the estate now belongs, to dig the ground, it being understood that she was also to receive a portion of the property supposed to be hidden there. Digging went on for a long time, but nothing was found. Three somnambulists were then consulted, each of whom fixed on a different spot, and in each spot excavations on a very extensive scale were made. Briefly, the search was carried on with such energy that the property of the Marquise was completely devastated, and that lady, quite disgusted, had to call the police to turn the explorers out of her estate. Debts, however, had been incurred by M. Robert, who, beginning to doubt whether the alleged descendant of the "Governor of India under Louis XV." was not an impostor, refused to restore her the "historical document," had it examined by experts, and learned that it must have been drawn up within the last fifty years. The Tribunal awarded him fifty francs damages, but the Marquise has obtained nothing for the damage done to her estate.—London Standard.

Root Crops.

The root crop is far better entitled to be called "the pivotal crop" of the farm than grass is. It is indeed the pivot around which the whole of the farm work will revolve. Five acres of roots should yield from four thousand to five thousand bushels or one hundred and twenty to one hundred and fifty tons. One ton of roots will feed one cow or one steer for about forty to fifty days, and the five acres will therefore provide for the feeding of thirty head of stock during six months. With this supply of roots and plenty of straw and some purchased bran or oil cake meal, then, thirty head of stock can be fed or fattened, and by good management two hundred tons of excellent manure can be made for the improvement of the land. If this crop, then, does not deserve to occupy the central position in the farmer's mind, what other crop can? It is very important just now to consider this subject, because if roots are to be grown immediate preparations should be made.—N. Y. Times.

The Old, Old Story,

Why do we hear so much about dyspepsia? Simply because so many people have it. Why are so many people talking about their cure of this dreadful disease? Simply because they have been taking Brown's Iron Bitters. Thus it is with Mrs. Taylor of Lynchburg, Sumpter Co., S. Father, Mother, and Three Sisters Dead.

Mr. David Claypool, formerly Sergeant-at-Arms of the New Jersey Senate, and now Notary Public at Cedarville, Cumberland Co., N. J., makes the following startling statement: "My father, mother, and three sisters all died with consumption, and my lungs were so weak I raised blood. Nobody thought I could live. My work (shipsmithing) was very straining on me with my weak constitution, and I was rapidly going to the grave. While in this condition I commenced using Mishler's Herb Bitters, and it saved my life. Because it was so difficult to get it in this little place, and I had improved so much, I stopped taking it for a time, and the result is that I have commenced going rapidly down hill again. Somehow, Mishler's Herb Bitters gives appetite and strengthens and builds me up as nothing else does, and I must have a dozen bottles at once. Use this communication as you please, and if any one wants to be convinced of its truth, let them write me and I will make affidavit to it, for I owe my life to Mishler's Herb Bitters."

The secret of the almost invariable relief and cure of consumption, dysentery, diarrhœa, dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver complaints, when Mishler's Herb Bitters is used, is that it contains simple, harmless, and yet powerful ingredients, that act on the blood, kidneys, and liver, and through them strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Purely vegetable in its composition; prepared by a regular physician; a standard medicinal preparation; endorsed by physicians and druggists. These are four strong points in favor of Mishler's Herb Bitters. Mishler's Herb Bitters is sold by all druggists. Price $1.00 per large bottle. 6 bottles for $5.00.

Ask your druggist for MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS. If he does not keep it, do not take anything else, but send a postal card to MISHLER HERB BITTERS CO., 525 Commerce Street, Philadelphia.

A MAN OF HIS WORD.

How General Grant Saved the Neck of General R. E. Lee.

The war was over. General Lee and his half-starved Confederates had returned to their deserted homes on the parole of honor. The victorious Northern and Western armies, under command of Grant and Sherman, were encamped in and around Washington City. Jefferson Davis, Alexander Stephens, Robert M. T. Hunter, John H. Reagan, Postmaster Morris and Edwin M. Stanton were there, and the latter was the Secretary of War.

General Grant and Rawlins were playing a game of billiards in the Navy Department building, and I was looking on, sitting upon an opposite table. A few minutes before, an officer had brought a dispatch from the War Department and handed it to Secretary Stanton. The latter had read it, and, with a smile, had said to Grant, "Sheridan doubt[illegible] the Shenandoah Valley." One of the game balls had just been driven home, and Grant was about to make his next shot when the door-keeper announced "General Lee and staff." Grant straightened up, and said quickly:

"Mr. Secretary, when General Lee surrendered to me at Appomattox Court House I gave him my word and honor that neither he nor any of his officers would be disturbed so long as they observed their parole and the laws. I have heard nothing to cause me to believe that any of us have violated our parole, and have sought to make sure of that fact, and would also suggest that those orders be canceled."

Secretary Stanton became terribly angry at being spoken to in such a manner by his inferior officer, and said:

"General Grant, are you aware whom you are talking to? I am the Secretary of War."

Quick as a flash Grant answered back: "And I am General Grant. Issue those orders at your peril." Then turning on his heel General Grant walked out of the room as unconcerned as if no thing had happened.

"It is needless to say," continued Colonel Barroll, "that neither General Lee nor any of his soldiers were arrested. I was dismissed from the presence of the Secretary with the remark that my services in connection with the arrest of the leading rebels would be dispensed with until he took time to consider, and I know what the result of his decision

Like some cases in law, that decision of the great War Secretary was reserved for a time, but whether the game of billiards between Generals Grant and Rawlins was ever played out to an end has never been definitely known, though it was surmised that with the aid of a consoling cigar the game was finished.—*N. NEMESIS.

To What the Menacing Position of Russia in Asia is Due.

The menacing position of Russia in Central Asia toward the British possessions of that country is due to the policy of the Western powers in preventing the natural expansion of Russia towards the Southwest. To properly develop the commerce and industry of Russia it ought to be her in possession of Constantinople. That potentially important spot of the Eastern world is the key to the trade of Russia as to all our seaboard cities including New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Newport, New Orleans, San Francisco and Portland, to the proper development of the business of our own country. Russia has been driven back upon herself and one-sixth of the human race exist in poverty because the Sultan and not the Czar holds Constantinople and the keys to the Dardanelles. The only outlet for the expanding energies of the Russian Empire is in Asiatic territory to the south and east, hence the conquest of Central Asia and the appearance of the menacing Muscovite armies on the borders of Afghanistan. Great Britain was one of the most important powers that prevented Russia from developing her commerce in the Mediterranean, and her reward may in time be the loss of her possessions in Southern Asia.—Demorest's Monthly.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Lydia Chiverall, born in Scarboro, York County, Ontario. Was married January 19th, 1862, to Frederick Chiverall. She lived in Tecumseh eighteen years. Died Friday, June 5th, 1885, after a brief sickness, 42 years of age.

A husband, daughter and son mourn her departure. She was a faithful wife, a loving mother, a sincere friend and a kind neighbor. The funeral, held at the residence of the family on Saturday afternoon, June 6th, was largely attended and expresses more than words how much she was esteemed, and the sympathy of this community with those bowed down in sorrow.

The pastor of the Universalist church of this village, Rev. J. M. Fetchet, officiated and though his remarks were brief, they were touched with a spirit of hope, comfort and prayer. In closing he quoted these beautiful yet suggestive lines written by Whittier.

"Our lives are albums, written through
With good or ill, with false or true;
And as the blessed angels turn
The pages of our years,
God grant they read the good with smiles,
And blot the ill with tears."

THREE EFFECTS.—The thousands of remarkable cures which have been accomplished by Hood's Sarsaparilla are due simply to three effects which this great medicine has upon those who take it:

First: It purifies the blood.
Second: It strengthens the system.
Third: It gives healthy action to the digestive organs.

With these three effects no disease can long retain its hold. It is forced to leave the system, giving place to health and strength, through the potent influence of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Sold by all druggists. Try it.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

Miss Laura Clark, went to Albion last Saturday to visit Miss Lou Rowland.

Mrs. Will Wood returned from Canada last week.

G. W. Freeze was in town over Sunday.

Mrs. J. T. Clark returned from Blissfield last Saturday, where she had been for a couple of weeks.

There is to be quite a change among the teachers in this school next year. It is rumored that one of the graduates of '82 is to take the first primary. Miss Ida McConnell who has occupied that position for nearly four years will have the second primary and Miss Mary Sinclair will have the position now held by Miss Laura Haggart. Miss Ida Fullerton and Prof. Laflin retain their old positions, which they have filled so satisfactorily.

Mr. David Woodward expects a large crop of strawberries from his vines this year, and prophecies that they will be a drug on the market.

Mrs. Nimocks returned from Jackson last week where she has been undergoing medical treatment.

Mrs. Frank Scovell left Clinton for her home in South Bend, Ind., last Saturday.

Mrs. Frank Brown is very sick.

The M. E. and Congregational churches observed children's day. The M. E. church was almost transformed into a beautiful garden. It was literally filled with birds and flowers; the Congregational church was trimmed very tastily though not on as extensive a scale as the Methodist.

Mr. & Mrs. William Mather of Tecumseh and Mrs. Augusta Brooks were in Clinton two or three days this week.

Commencement exercises will be held this year as usual in the Town Hall, Thursday evening, June 25th. The members of the class, are, Dwight Hause, Ansel Kishpaugh, George E. McConnell and Miss Maggie Biggins. The program will consist of orations from the graduates, music, presentation of diplomas, etc.

The Alumni will give their entertainment Friday Evening, June 26th. An admission of 10cts. will be charged to defray expenses. An address by Prof. Laflin, poem by Miss Ella Clark, history by Miss Laura Haggart and music, instrumental and vocal will be presented. After the entertainment, the banquet will be held at the Lancaster House, where responses to toasts will be given. After supper the reception will afford excellent opportunities for a good time to all.

Last week a couple of itinerant soap-sellers honored this place with their presence, applied for and obtained a license to sell their wares. As they commenced operations one old settler was heard to say, "They must think the fools aint all dead." In a very short time, this same o. s. was seen wandering idly across the street in the direction of these men who were applying their persuasive power to the by-standers, to purchase the soap with their choice of several packages of money. The above mentioned personage eyed them, (the packages) wistfully for a time, and finally seeming to forget his remark of a few moments before, went to work in the most approved style to know the truth of what he had said. The result was the loss of ten dollars for him, and the gain of the same amount for the soap-sellers. There may be some consolation for him however in the knowledge that he was not the only one whose greed of gain led him into trouble. There is another to whom ten dollars would be a welcome sum, to fill the hole recently made in his pocket-book; and still another, whose life "on the road" would lead us to suppose that he had acquired enough knowledge of the world to protect him from being swindled in such an openfaced trick as this. But we must all live and learn, dear as may be the experience to some of us.

BRITTON BUDGET.

E. C. Rauch has moved to Monroe. He leaves many friends behind him. We wish him success in his new venture.

H. C. Rauch has put in a line of groceries with his drug store.

The weather continues fine. Cultivating corn occupies the attention of the farmers now; they will hardly stop to speak.

Rev. Bordin has purchased E. C. Rauch's residence and will move in at once. We greet him with pleasure.

On Wednesday evening, June 24th, the Christian Sunday School will give an ice cream festival.

The dogs are committing sad havoc among the lambs in this vicinity.—Wm. Randall has lost eight, John Taylor seven, and others several during the last few days. Our warning of last week needs repeating. Owners of dogs look out.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

The usual number of foreign guests made our races interesting, and furnished some millionaire farmers with green spots for their memories. It is doubtful if any one of the victims would have subscribed fifty dollars for the soldiers home, with as little persuading as they paid that amount for nothing, rolled in brown paper. The Jewish Rabbi, who sold money, did a good business with those who are eager to get double their moneys worth, and though they lost ducats and vanity by trusting to appearances, they are almost dropsical with experience. Now that the fights are over and fines all paid, the race affair looks nicer than if yet to be.

A conflagration of suspicious origin, got fair start on some fence posts by the side of Mr. Sheridan's store, and but for Mrs. A. C. Ennis would have destroyed that side of main street in a few minutes, as a great deal of explosive material stored near by would have made personal safety the mainspring of action. The night was dusky and place sheltered from observation. A large crate of paper and packing moss made good kindling, and though all was well at midnight, the blaze was progressing rapidly at one o'clock, and whether accidental or malicious we are thankful for the result.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Cool nights again.

Working on the road is the order of the day now.

Orders have been drawn to pay back the $1,000 voted to build a school house in Dist. No. 1 to the tax payers, so we shall not get a school house for some years to come.

Mr. and Mrs. James Sutherland, of Holloway, visited Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Linn, Tuesday.

One fare for round trip over the M. & O. to Tecumseh next Saturday, to attend the great Doris circus. The freight train will carry passengers.

A. R. Arner is on the sick list at present.

Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Cadmus rusticated at Wampler's Lake for a few days last week.

Children's day will be observed next Sunday. In the morning Rev. W. J. Clack will give a discourse to the children, and in the evening the Sunday School will present an exercise prepared for the occasion.

Miss Cora Jackson, of Pennington's Corners spent Sabbath with cousins here.

Dr. D. W. Loree's hay bailing gang bailed 10½ tons of hay in half a day last week.

Miss Jennie Calhoun, of Tecumseh, was the guest of Miss Nellie Freer Sunday.

Mrs. R. H. Nelson and Mrs. W. J. Clack, visited friends in Dundee last week.

The attendance at the concert given at Britton, Friday night, was somewhat limited. The society fulfilled their part of the program however.

Mr. Martin Palmer arrived home Friday night from Hillsdale, where he has been attending college.

Miss Ada Loree returned from Detroit Saturday evening, where she has been visiting her sister; Mrs. Alfred Lucking.

Miss Belle Barlow spent Sunday at home, returning Tuesday morning to the college at Adrian.

Mr. John Houseman, of Clinton, came Saturday night to see his mother, Mrs. John Housman, who is failing slowly.

Miss Lizzie Curtis, of Dundee, is visiting her uncle.

It is rather strange that your reporter can't take his cousin home on Sunday evening without creating such a sensation.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Jackson returned Monday from a week's visit among friends in Gratiot and Clinton counties, having spent the Sabbath with Mr. and Mrs. Will Howe in Jackson. They report a pleasant time and are well pleased with the country.

The Ladies social will give a strawberry festival, on G. W. Jackson's lawn, next week Wednesday evening. The Ladies are requested to bring biscuit, butter and cake.

The oiling is completed and the carpets down, and the church looks fine. The ladies can feel proud of their efforts for the past few years in keeping up their socials, for their good work looms up fine, and with credit.

Fred Fagan and J. D. Arner took the black team that Mrs. M. A. Barrett sold to Geo. McElcheran for a hearse team, to Ypsilanti, Wednesday.

On Wednesday morning occured one of those [illegible] occasions that is better [illegible] than experienced, in the marriage of Mr. James Barlow and Miss Mary Clark, by Rev W. J. Clack, at the home of the bride's mother Mrs. Susan Clark. As there was no wedding made we were surprised. The happy couple left for a few days at the lakes, returning Saturday night. We extend our congratulations and wish them a happy, successful, prosperous journey over life's troubled sea.

DEVIL'S LAKE DOINGS.

Albert Bedell is building a large barn.

John Brazee raised the wing part of his new hotel Tuesday. Will put up the main building next week; expects to have it ready to occupy about the middle of July.

Frank and George Chidester, Dave Macham and Frank James caught a fine lot of fish Tuesday.

TIPTON TOPICS.

Last Sabbath, Children's Day was observed at the Congregational church. Wreathes of evergreens and flowers in abundance, with excellent recitations, reading and singing by the choir and children, were the attractions that filled the church with an appreciative audience. Next Sunday the M. E. society will have similar appropriate exercises at the church.

Statute labor is performed hereabouts by the practical method of drawing gravel on the roads instead of turnpiking with soft clay or sods.

Supervisor Love, whom we mentioned last week as suffering from a severe attack of brain fever, is recovering.

Last Sunday morning at the uncanny hour of 2 A. M. a quartette of nice young men, who live not many miles northeast from here, invaded our hamlet and annoyed the entire neighborhood by trying to gain entrance to stores and hotel in quest of food, even threatening to break in and help themselves. It was fortunate for them that they did not attempt the latter. We advise these dudes, when they get on a little brindle again, as they call it, not to give their names, or their disgraceful conduct may cost them more than their refreshments.

The severity of the past winter has caused no diminution in the numbers or species of insects injurious to vegetable life: in fact, judging from the reports from different quarters they seem to be more numerous than ever before.

THE FOURTH AT ADRIAN.

We clip the following from the Daily Record of Tuesday:

As all of our readers know there has been for some time no doubt but that the celebration in this city will be about the biggest thing of the kind ever seen in this part of the country. One of the main features of the occasion will be the grand military display and sham battle, which is now an assured fact. Twenty military companies have been invited to take part. Already the Jackson, Ann Arbor, Ypsilanti, and Monroe companies have accepted, and favorable intelligence of many more companies has been received. An artillery battery will be secured, and a fine sham battle may be looked for. Besides the military, a large number of civil organizations, the finely equipped Adrian fire department and several of visiting fire departments will add to the grandeur of the display.

One hundred dollar prizes in music are offered to bands of music, barring the Adrian city band. Games of all kinds will add to the merriment of the occasion. Wheelbarrow races, foot races, greased pig, greased pole, ducking for silver, and many other games for which prizes will be offered. Bicycle races in which all wheelmen are invited to participate will also be had. No pains will be spared to make this celebration one long to be remembered. Excursion rates will be given on all the railroads. A large amount of money has been raised by subscription to defray the expenses.

A costly and beautiful pyrotechnic display in the evening will be worth coming miles to see.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly

For July contains two articles which will attract considerable attention. The leading one, "England's Last Struggle with Russia," in which the Crimean War and the causes that led to it are described by T. F. Galway; the other article is on "Victor Hugo." Both are profusely illustrated and intensely readable. Marc F. Vallette contributes a careful study of the 'Early Life of Mary Stuart," which is accompanied by ten illustrations. American subjects in this number are "The Grain Commerce of New York," by Oscar W. Riggs, with seven illustrations; "The Aztec Eagle, and when it was Found, and other Mexican Topics, by Mrs. Emily Pierce; and "Our Northern Lakes and Mountains," by James B. Townsend, with eleven illustrations. There are many shorter articles and poems, several interesting stories, including the new serial, "Of Two Evils," by Prof. Clarence M. Boutelle. Published by Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York, at 25 cents a number, or $3.00 a year, postpaid.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT, JUNE 1, 1885.

For this report returns have been received from 96 correspondents, representing 79 townships. Six hundred and fifty of these returns are from 429 townships in the southern four tiers of counties.

The weather during May was cool and dry. At Lansing, the average temperature for the month was 55.71 degrees, as compared with an average of 58 degrees in May, 1884. The highest temperature was 80 degrees on the 17th and 24th, and the lowest 29 degrees on the 10th. The highest temperature in May, 1884, was 82 degrees, and the lowest 34 degrees. The rainfall during the month was only 1 and 85 hundredths inches, as compared with 4 and 34 hundredths inches in May, 1884, and 6 and 31 hundredths inches in May, 1883. Since June 1, rain has fallen to the amount of 4 and 37-hundredths inches.

Wheat has made good growth during the month, and the promise now for the southern four tiers of counties is for an average yield of 17 and one fourth bushels per acre, or one fourth of a bushel more than the average for the eight years, 1876-83. In the northern counties the yield per acre may reach 16 bushels, or nearly one bushel more than the average for eight years.

With favorable weather until harvest the aggregate yield in the State will exceed 25,000,000 bushels, and may reach 25 and one-fourth million bushels.

The first footings of supervisors' returns from 759 townships indicate that the present wheat area of the State is about 1,500,000 acres.

Reports have been received of the quantity of wheat marketed by farmers during the month of May at 164 elevators and mills. Of these 143 are in the southern four tiers of counties, which is 30 per cent of the whole number of elevators and mills in these counties. The total number of bushels reported marketed is 472,194, of which 225,592 bushels were marketed in the first or southern tier of counties; 137,071 bushels in the second tier; 38,113 bushels in the third tier; 54,093 bushels in the fourth tier; and 17,325 bushels in the counties north of the southern four tiers. At 26 elevators and mills, or 16 per cent of the whole number from which reports have been received, there was no wheat marketed during the month.

The total number of bushels reported marketed in the ten months, August-May, is 8,017,784. This is 32 per cent of the crop of 1884. In June, 1884, 39 per cent of the 1883 crop had been reported marketed.

The area planted to corn this year will equal the area planted in 1884. Ninety-six per cent of the seed used was grown in Michigan, and eight per cent of the seed failed to grow.

The returns give the following percentages for other crops, the comparison being with 1884: Oats—acres sowed 101, condition 92; barley—acres sowed 96, condition 92; sorghum—acres planted 92, number of farmers planting 91; meadows and pastures—condition 94; clover sowed this year—acres failed to grow 7, condition 95; prospects for an average crop of apples 77. In the southern four tiers of counties the wages of farm hands average, with board, $16.49, and in the northern counties $16.48 per month; without board the average is $23.80 in the southern counties, and $25.80 in the northern counties.

The first footings of the sheep and wool columns in the reports received from the supervisors of 743 townships show that there were 2,094,126 sheep sheared in 1884, yielding 11,847,839 pounds of wool, and that the number of sheep in the same townships the present year is 1,920,302, which is four and eighteen-hundredths per cent less than in 1884.

THE BOUNTY AND SOLDIERS HOME BILLS.

An old soldier writes the following communication to the Adrian Times, which reflects the views entertained by a good many men of that class. The old soldiers should be well provided for, that is certain. But how to best provide for them is a debatable question.

A tax-payer desires, through the press, to present this financial elephant, that we may grasp its magnitude. I see no justice or wisdom in either bill. A bounty of $100 to an approximate number of 30,000 Michigan surviving soldiers, in various positions and localities, would take $3,000,000. It is claimed that there are not over 100 injured Michigan soldiers in the state, that would be only $10,000, and not $3,000,000, as the bill requires. Shame on such work. It should be defeated.

The home bill asks for $200,000, to build a home; like all public jobs, add a third more for completion, $300,000; officers and incidental expenses per annum, $20,000; table for say 200 inmates, af $40 per capita, $8,000; an annual expense of $28,000. This bill is no doubt pushed by contractors and should be killed.

Why don't those Lansing buncombes, bursting with charity for the poor soldiers, come to the point with a bill granting immediate relief to the unfortunate heroes, proving their loyalty by working for the poor soldier and tax-payers, and not for the jobbers and pettifoggers. A bill granting a pension of $15 a month, or $180 per annum, to every worthy, indigent Michigan soldier resident of the state, would be a more just and feasible tribute to the unfortunate patriots. This heritage, say to 200, would be $36,000 per annum justly awarded. This brief analysis of this subject I hope will meet the approval of the tax-payers, and enlist the influence of the press against the jobbers and office-seekers, so called, relief bill.

THE WONDER

Is becoming universal as to how such an immense sale could be created in Lowell for HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. But, my friend, if you could stand behind our counter a week and hear what those say who are using it, the reason would appear as clear as the noon-day sun. The real curative power of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA demonstrates itself in every case where our directions are faithfully regarded. We would that we might get before the people a fractional part of the confidence that is expressed to us every day in this medicine by those who have carefully noted (without prejudice) its effects upon the blood and through that upon the whole system, stimulating all the functions of the body to perform the duties nature requires of them. Try a bottle and satisfy yourself.

Cold Hands and Feet.

LOWELL, Feb. 3, 1879.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—About one year ago my daughter commenced taking your Sarsaparilla. At that time she had very little appetite; could take no long walks; and her face was badly broken out with a humor. She was low-spirited; troubled with cold hands and feet; her blood seemed to be poor, and she was in a condition which caused us great anxiety. After taking one bottle of your Sarsaparilla she began to improve, and she now has a good appetite and can take much longer walks. Her humor is nothing compared with what it was one year ago. She is in better spirits, is not troubled with cold hands and feet as previously. And I attribute this improvement in her condition largely to your Sarsaparilla. She has taken six bottles, and intends to continue its use. I was inclined to oppose the trial of it at first. I now have great faith in it as a blood purifier. Very truly yours,

A. L. HINCKLEY,

LATE FASHIONS.

What the Ladies of the Metropolis Assume to be the Mode.

Eton, Spanish and zouave jackets are worn by young girls in their teens.

Golden oats and wheat are sold by the head for bonnet and hat trimmings.

Red and yellow, golden brown and tan are immensely popular spring colors.

The jersey is the best bodice for lawn tennis, for it is a game that is rough on sleeves.

The Recamier coiffure requires the use of a large old-fashioned comb of tortoise shell or jewelled metal.

China crape and sailcloth canvas is an admired frequent combination in the trimming of French hats.

Red woolen lace trims admirably dark blue cloth and blue wool etamine suits for seaside and mountain wear.

More and more marked grow the differences between street and indoor frocks, morning, afternoon and evening toilets.

English mohair fabrics, plain and broche, are found in all the large retail dry goods houses in both single and double widths.

Veils of tulle and crepe lisse in every imaginable shade of color and black are finely dotted with gold, silver, steel, bronze or jet.

Even silver gray can be made loud and striking by too free use of bright steel or silver braid, tinsel, fringe, balls, embroidery, or motifs.

Morning dresses and elegant house toilets are made dressy with profuse use of ribbons in bows, flots, cascades, panels, and floating loops and ends.

The height and trimmings of hats and bonnets are as exaggerated as ever, and yet comparatively few of these exaggerated shapes are seen in the streets as yet.

The French productions of silk handkerchiefs in Oriental colors and designs, shot with gold, are utilized to an enormous extent for trimming fine hats and bonnets.

More and more golden grow bonnets, hats, scarfs, accessories of the toilet, dress trimmings, and broche stuffs of all kinds either for dresses or upholstery and house decorative effects.

Ribbons were never more in demand for decorative dress and furnishing than this spring.

The Recamier coiffure, lately introduced in Paris, bids fair to supercede the high figure 8 on the top of the head hair dressing and the catogan look in the nape of the neck.

The newest silk hosiery consists of lace-woven stockings, the foot and ankle having lengthwise clocks and embroidery up the sides in inch-wide bands, leaving a plain strip down the instep, while the calf of the leg is entirely lace-woven.

The skirt destined to summer popularity is destitute of drapery or flounces, is gathered full in the back, pleated at the sides, and plain in front, simply hemmed or has a hem and three, two, or several overlapping tucks or folds above the hem.

Salesmen in the best houses now tell ladies that sixteen yards of silk are sufficient for a dress this season instead of the twenty necessary last season, as there is so much less drapery, less looping and less flouncing and pleating than formerly.

Very rich summer black dresses are made of China crape, embroidered for the skirt, and overdresses of black lace, but the richer combination is made of satin rhadames for the skirt and underdress, while the overdress is of black llama or Chantilly lace, in the old patterns and designs.

Short visite mantles with the sleeves entirely of jet embroidery or jet net, and the body of plain velvet, satin or grenadine broche, are trimmed with jet fringes, jet macaroons and motifs. Sometimes the sleeves are of plain stuff, while the body is covered with jet bead embroidery or net.

The printed Khyber cloths sold at eighteen cents the yard are just the thing to combine with self-colored veilings at fifteen cents the yard, for lawn and garden party dresses. The beige, twine-colored, and tan woolen laces are the correct trimmings for these dresses, and cheap ribbons make them dressy and chic.

Bonnet scarfs of black, blue, green, gray, beige, white, tan, and brown barege, striped or barred across at each end with various colors, in the style of a Roman scarf, with gold lines between those of color, trim many pretty bonnets, and are also used for neckwear and various toilet and decorative purposes.

The proper way to use golden grain, oats and wheat, in hat and bonnet trimming is to put from three to six heads of the grain in a panache of ostrich feathers and a bunch of gold catkins, or a gold or silk pompon, or, in place of the feathers, a close but tall bouquet of flowers, mingled with golden catkins.

The newest silk undervests for ladies have no gores set in for the bosom fullness, but this is provided for in the weaving, which shapes the garment with a soft woven seam in such a manner as to define the exact shape. Fastidious women edge the low necks and short sleeves of these vests with lace.

Flower weddings are all the rage in London. At these the bride and her bridesmaids wear dresses representing spring flowers, lilies, white roses, orange blossoms or other white flowers being the representative blossoms of the bride, while her maids wear daffodil, buttercup, jonquil, hyacinth, red or pale rose or violet-colored frocks trimmed with the flower to be personated.—*N. Brought Home a Wagon.

Louisville, Ky.—Mr. J. Helmus, Vice President of the City Brewery, was brought home in a wagon, carried up two pair of stairs by two of his men and laid on the bed. He was suffering with a severe attack of rheumatism contracted in the ice vaults of the brewery. He refused to have a doctor, but dispatched a servant for a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, with the result that in one week he was entirely cured and able to return to his desk.

MARKET GARDENING

The following is the prize essay on "Market Gardening," written by Abner Wilson of Ingham for the Ohio Farmer, and recently published in that paper:

In engaging in the business of market gardening the first thing to take into consideration is the market to be supplied, and if that is already being supplied you should see if it cannot be furnished with a better article and at lower prices. Those towns and cities where manufacturing is carried on are the best markets. The next thing is shipping facilities for our surplus, for it does us a way worth of such stuff supplied to the larger places we must see that a low rate of freight is obtained to compensate for the lower prices we are have to take. If a market is already established we must create a demand. The next thing is the soil and location.

Here let me say, if you are three or four miles from your market you had better [illegible] not engage in the business. The better you can get to your market the better, even if you have to pay a higher rent or price per acre for your land, as the transportation is will take up time. That is, if it takes all the forenoon to go to market, [illegible] your load, and get back, all the profits are gone, as the gardener himself must be the salesman as well as foreman in the garden.

The best soil for a general assortment is a heavy sandy loam with a strong subsoil. It should be light enough so it will not bake after a rain. Muck land well drained is good for most vegetables, but not as early for early vegetables, but as sure in an season as upland. If your soil is heavy it is more suitable for small fruits than for vegetables. The size of the garden should be regulated by the market to be supplied and the capital of the gardener, but I have found that the fewer the acres the better the results. Other things being equal, I should say for a man and boy and two horses eight acres are enough. Lay out your garden with a rod pole so that the rows will come out even, and have your drives and walks at right angles. Of course you must have manure, and a compost heap is indispensable. It should have been added to from time to time by drawing from town everything you could buy, and if you do a good job many are glad to give away manure. You can add muck, night soil, slaughter-house refuse, feathers and blood from poultry slaughter houses, as well as all you can make from your own stock. Some works on gardening advocate seventy-five tons to the acre, but that would not pay in any market which I am acquainted with as far west as Ohio. I think on land in good heart from fifteen to twenty-five loads to the acre, plowed in, and two to five hundred pounds of superphosphate, with four to eight hundred pounds of salt or two hundred pounds of nitrate of soda, as a top dressing, is plenty. Wood ashes are also good. If you can rent a manure spreader it will pay you to do so, as that will break it up fine and distribute it evenly.

For earlier stuff, plow as early as the ground is in good condition, not sooner, using a jointer and plowing a little deeper than the surface soil. Harrow thoroughly, ride the drag, pulverize till the soil is as fine as ashes. Of course your hot-beds for your early cabbage and cauliflower should have been started in February or March. By so doing you will have better plants and early cabbage than if wintered over in cold frames. Tomatoes and peppers should not be started till the first of April. After the ground is in right condition for planting no time should be lost, as much depends on getting seed and plants in when the soil works good, and the gardener has to work early and late, in rain and other inclement weather, as no hired help will do much unless the foreman is with them, the gardener must be both foreman and workman taking his chances with the rest. In setting early cabbage we take them from the seed-bed, trim them to one leaf and puddle the roots in mud. Some gardeners set with a pointed stick called a 'dibber,' but we much prefer a trowel with a convex and concave surface; place the trowel with the concave side next to you and press the earth toward you; if the surface is a dry, one sweep sideways brings you to moist earth; place the plant in with the left hand, give the earth a vigorous push with the right, and the plant is set; no hollow space below the root, and if there is any moisture in the soil the pressure will hold it. The rows for early cabbage should be thirty inches apart, and the plants of the early Jersey Wakefield should be set eighteen inches in the rows, and those of Henderson's Early Summer, two feet.

Early Peas are a good crop to raise and in some years pay well, but they will not do to ship as they soon mould. The best varieties are the Philadelphia Extra Early and McLean's Little Gem, putting in the most of the latter.

White Silver Skin onions from bottom sets, planted very early, on rich soil, in rows fifteen inches apart, setting the sets well down in the soil, still further covering them with the feet or garden rake and roller, will give good returns if sold in bunches of about six each, especially if cheap labor can be got to do the washing and bunching. In the same manner the French Breakfast and the long scarlet radish and Egyptian and Eclipse beet can often be put on the market when there is but little competition and good prices realized. The growing of onions from seed does not properly come under the head of market gardening. They are usually grown on land especially adapted to other culture. Some [illegible] land which a few years ago could be bought cheap would now command from two to five hundred dollars per acre for onions alone.

Asparagus is usually the first vegetable to be sold on the market. To raise a bed of asparagus, two year old roots should be planted in rows four feet apart, setting the crowns six inches below the surface. They should not be cut in the third year of growth. Conover's Colossal is the best variety. In some markets it is sold by the pound, bunch and some markets where it ties in bundles with the tips all one way. It can then be set in water and will keep fresh for a long time.

Parsnips and vegetable oysters should be planted early so as to get the plants up before hot weather; the rows should be two feet apart and if the seed is sown carefully by hand they will not need thinning. They should be taken up in the fall and packed with earth mixed in to keep them fresh. Vegetable oysters should be packed in a shallow trench with the tops up and covered so they can be taken up and sold during the winter. They are usually sold in bunches of about one pound each.

Tomatoes should be planted from the 20th of May to the 1st of June. Give the plants plenty of room and fertilize with wood ashes and superphosphate. The best varieties are the Acme, Perfection and Favorite as Livingston's. Peppers should be planted the same time as tomatoes, the rows can be closer. The sweet Mountain and Cayenne are the leading varieties. Early Cucumbers, Summer Squash and Snap beans, to be profitable should be started early. The cucumbers and squash should be planted in sods cut in squares, under glass about the first of May and set out after the danger of frost is over. White Spine Cucumber and Summer Crookneck squash are the best varieties.

THE LATER CROPS.

After the gardener has his early varieties planted he should prepare for his late crop of cabbage, beets and celery. For late cabbage I generally select new ground or a piece of sod. Spread evenly fifteen tons of manure and about the first of June plow and roll down. Top dress with 200 pounds of superphosphate and 400 pounds of salt to the acre. The salt contains fifteen per cent of nitrate, which with the moisture from the salt acts quickly on the superphosphate, giving the plants such a start that they soon get away from the grubs and worms. Here as with early cabbage, we trim to one leaf and thoroughly mud the roots. This work can be done by boys or girls, taking plants in the shade and working on tables. With the plants ready for them and a boy to drop, two men should set two acres in a day. Three feet each way is the right distance. The varieties should be Fottler's Early Brunswick for early fall use, and for winter, the Premium Flat Dutch and no other. Much money is lost every year by planting late cabbage too early. They should be planted from the 20th of June till the 5th of July.

Celery.—This crop, like onions, is now grown largely on land especially adapted to it, and such land is well drained muck where the water is about two feet below the surface. It is true we can grow good celery on rich upland but we cannot get it in the market as early as that grown on the muck. We must raise it for the winter market when this early celery is gone or can not be shipped safely. For this purpose it should be planted about the 15th of July, on land where we have taken a crop of early peas or beets, in rows 3½ feet apart, and the plants six inches in the rows. No extra manure will be needed but a dressing of salt will be found beneficial. The plants should be trimmed in the same manner as cabbage plants and set with trowels. The varieties should be Crawford's Half Dwarf, Boston Market and Golden Heart Dwarf. Beets for winter use should be sown from the 1st to the 15th of July, treading the rows well with the feet; in fact, the feet should occupy an important place in planting nearly all crops.

You now have your garden planted. I trust you have kept the weeds down with rake, hoe and cultivator, so that we will not have so much hard work to do in August and September. In our warfare with weeds an ounce of garden rake is worth any amount of hacking up with the hoes, in other words, keep the soil so completely stirred that the weeds will not have a chance to get a start.

Select tools that are made of steel and are light; hoes should be thin and not too wide. The garden drill is a good though not an indispensable implement, as a great many seeds, such as beet, parsnip and vegetable oyster, are better sown by hand; but for onion, turnip, cabbage, etc., a drill is better. The Matthews and Planet Jr. are both good. For a wheel hoe the Ruhlman takes the lead. For a horse cultivator there is none better than the Planet Jr. We also use what is called a "scuffler" when the crop is small. It is made with the knives running under the surface of the ground, and should be worked in the fore part of the day so that the weeds will die by the heat of the sun.

The market wagon should be a platform spring, with a box long enough to put in ten bushel baskets, with a shelving around the side for smaller ones. Do not draw manure in your market wagon, as is recommended by some. Do that with a pair of broad-tired trucks and two good horses or mules.

In conclusion I would say, if you are within a short distance from a good market; if you have a soil that is suitable; if you have an unlimited amount of manure at your command; if you are willing to give your personal attention, and work early and late, in rain and in sunshine; if you have a natural taste for the business and are willing to stick to it through thick and thin—you will find the business of market gardening profitable.

HAS DENBY.

Colonel Chas. Denby, of Evansville, Ind., who was appointed on May 20th, 1885, to succeed John Russell Young as minister to China, is by birth a Virginian, having been born in Botetourt county of that state, June 30th, 1830. He was educated partly at Georgetown, D. C., and whilst there received three medals for excelling in his studies. He graduated at the Virginia Military Institute, and in 1853 removed to Evansville, where he was employed on the "Daily Enquirer," supporting himself thus whilst he was studying law in the office of Baker & Garvin. He was admitted to the bar in 1855 and in the following year was sent to the state legislature where he served with distinction. He was appointed by James Buchanan surveyor of the port of Evansville and continued in this office for three years. Upon the outbreak of the late war he served as Lieutenant Colonel of the 42nd Regiment, Indiana Volunteers, and subsequently became Colonel of the 69th Regiment. After a service of three years he resigned, having been twice wounded during his service. Devoting himself to his profession Col. Denby became one of the most distinguished barristers of his section. He was frequently pressed to accept the nomination for Congress, but always declined. He, in conjunction with Mr. Kumler, formed the law firm of Denby and Kumler. In 1858 Mr. Denby was married to Miss Fitch, a daughter of Ex. U. S. Senator, G. N. Fitch, of Logansport, Indiana. Col. Denby, besides being thoroughly conversant with the French and Spanish languages, is well versed in Oriental affairs and will doubtless make a most acceptable minister to that country. John Russell Young, whom he succeeded, is well known to the public as the companion of Gen. Grant, during the latter's tour of the world, and as the author of the work describing the same.

MACON.

Thomas A. Siddel to Charles C. Wilkins, Sec. 6, $1,300.

AN OLD-TIME CONDUCTOR.

A silver-haired man with his wife, now a sedate mother, were among the many old students who arrived to-day from the east over the Lake Shore railroad. As the veteran conductor, Fred Avery, collected their tickets, the lady said: "Why, dear, that's the same conductor that ran the train the night I left college for home, and you persisted in following, and wouldn't rest contented until we had stopped off on my way home and got married." "That's so," said the man, and the memory of that delicious romance made him grasp the hand of the old conductor and gave it a hearty shake. Conductor Avery has seen a great deal of student life and romance on his trains. He is a veteran conductor of the Lake Shore road. He ran the first engine that rolled into Chicago from the east. That enthusiasm and enterprise which has made Chicagoans famous had already manifested itself, and they surprised Avery by hoisting him on top of a stage, and hauling him in triumph through the streets.—Hillsdale College Dispatch to Chicago Inter Ocean.

We are glad to learn the beautiful little statuettes prepared by the Committee of the Statue of Liberty are being subscribed for throughout the length and breadth of our country. This is as it should be, for it is the noble gift of France to the United States. Every lover of liberty should subscribe $1.00, which, if sent to Richard Butler, Secretary, 33 Mercer St., New York, will secure one of these artistic statuettes, being a fac-simile of Bartholdi's great work. Let the good work go on until every home in the land shall possess this proof of ownership in the grandest work of modern times—"Liberty Enlightening the World."

The July Quiver comes well filled and is welcome wherever it makes its way. The Quiver's success in the United States is what might have been expected, for it not only fills a want, but it fills it acceptably. In the present number we find the same variety of subjects and catholicity of taste of which we have had occasion to speak before. The frontispiece illustrates the poem, "Towards the Sunset," and gives us a motherly old soul sitting before her cottage door in an ample rocking chair, her knitting in her hand, and her eyes look with kindly inquiry out of the picture.

To the patrons of Slayton & Son and my friends in general. As you are too numerous to address individually, I take this opportunity to thank you for your patronage and all favors shown me or the firm in the past.

I have been with you for the past twenty years, five years a clerk for Slayton & Tindall, and fifteen years a partner with my father. On account of his health, father retires from the firm, and I propose to continue the business the same as conducted before, and hope by fair dealing, good goods and low prices, to merit a continuance of your patronage. Those having unsettled accounts with the firm are requested to call and make settlement as soon as convenient, that the books may be balanced.

Again thanking you for past favors and trusting our relations may be pleasant in the future,

I am, your humble servant,

ABOUT ANSWERING LETTERS.

EDITOR OF THE HERALD—I wish to ask you a question upon a little matter of social etiquette. Young ladies frequently receive letters of invitation of various kinds from would-be gentlemen acquaintances which they do not feel at liberty to accept. Which is the better course to pursue in such cases:—To neglect entirely to reply to such communications and thus convey the impression that you do not wish to recognize the sender in any manner, or to return a brief but positive declination? Please give me your views on this subject and oblige
A LADY SUBSCRIBER.

It is a fundamental rule of both business and social etiquette, to which there is scarcely an exception, that a civil letter always demands a civil answer. The letter may contain a request that cannot be granted, or an invitation which must be declined, the recipient may look upon it as an impertinent missive; still if it be a letter of proper character, couched in respectful language, the sender is entitled to a reply. A neglect to answer such a letter is far more likely to give offense and lead to unpleasant complications afterwards than a frank rebuff would be. A brief and polite reply, in three or four lines, can easily be written, which will convey the impression desired, will stop further attentions from the same source and leave no sting behind. A civil letter is always entitled to a civil reply.

Adrian Press: A Rome denizen went up to Addison last week and took a swig of Addison ardent, and undertook to go by the village dissension line, which is the mill pond. He lost control of his equilibrium and tumbled into the pond. Unfortunately help was close by and the man was pulled out. It was evidently a case of water seeking level, and he swears he won't drink any more Addison whisky.

Ad'n Record: The Petersburg Journal makes the inquiry, "Have we talent in our midst and shall it be developed and made useful, or shall it be allowed to languish and the whole community to recede in consequence?" The above was inspired by the fact that somebody had "kicked" against choir music in the churches. Let the Petersburg choirs be kept up. For that purpose we would be willing to spare the leader of the Salvation army choir of this city. He can be spared for any length of time to Petersburg. If he cannot "develope the talent" in that community, then the community had indeed better "recede."

Adrian Record: Mrs. S. Bloomfield, residing in the village of Deerfield, is at present exercising the motherly care of a million, more or less, of silk-worms which have recently hatched. Preparations for the advent of the worms had been made two years in advance by the setting of a quantity of young mulberry trees, from the leaves of which the silk worms are fed. The worms when first hatched are diminutive looking specimens, but they rapidly attain a growth of an inch and a half in length and half an inch in thickness, arriving at this overgrown stage in about thirty days from the hatching. They require more constant attention than a family of paupers imported by Washtenaw supervisors.

Adrian Record: Numerous and miscellaneous injuries by the remorseless barbed wire fence are reported. It is not alone the pantaloons of the small boy that suffer from the ragged edge; the mutilation of horses and cattle is of almost daily occurence. The barb should certainly go. It is a cruel and in the long run a costly device.

Morenci Observer: On Tuesday afternoon the freight train on the Fayette Branch was switching at Weston when a T rail at the east end of the switch turned over and threw the engine and tender, two box cars and a flat car off the track. The engine plowed into the ground to the axle-tree. Fortunately, the accident caused injury to no one. A dispatch was sent to Adrian for the wrecking car, and within sixty minutes it had arrived on the scene and was at work. Soon after another train reached there from Petersburg, and all hands on both trains numbered about 35. About 8 o'clock a side-track had been laid around the wreck and the wrecking-car passed over it. At 8:20 the regular train started for Adrian, and by 9 o'clock the engine and a box car yet remained to be put upon the track. This was done on the next day, after much labor.

Wm. Carrol, of Deerfield, was arrested last Monday evening for being drunk and disorderly, and taken to Adrian Tuesday morning. Monday evening he was "fired out" of McClure's grocery store for insulting a lady. He will be remembered as the same young rough that assaulted Dr. Hanse a few years ago.

Last Tuesday evening at the home of the bride in Toledo occurred the marriage of Mr. James Wilson, of this village, and Miss Mollie Keip. During her brief residence in Tecumseh last season Miss Keip made many friends, and the groom is one of our best known and highly esteemed young business men. The congratulations of the HERALD are heartily tendered.

The graduating exercises of the High School will be held at the Opera House on Thursday evening next, June 25th. Music will be provided by the Adrian lady quartette. The exercises will be of the usual character, consisting of addresses by the graduates, music, conferring of diplomas, &c. It is presumed that the audience will do their share in the line of floral offerings.

Quite a number of our citizens went to Toledo yesterday on the excursion.

Mr. Chas. W. Graves and wife, of Napoleon, Mich., spent last Sabbath with friends in Tecumseh.

The M. & O. company will give special excursion rates over their road next Saturday, and will run a special return train to Dundee in the evening.

Last Sunday was observed as Children's Day at the M. E. church. A service appropriaty to the day was held in the morning, and a Sunday School concert was given in the evening. The rostrum was handsomely decorated with bouquets and pots of flowers, and the program presented was most entertaining. Although the weather was sultry the church was crowded to its utmost capacity, and the audience felt well repaid for their attendance.

Hudson Gazette: Those people who always want the best, the first thing, don't generally fare as well as those who are content to begin at the bottom and work up gradually. Before the snow had passed away the TECUMSEH HERALD was longing for a circus. The Gazette said, a band organ would do Hudson for a starter, and we have had it, with all the concomitants—a trained monkey, "Mary Had a Little Lamb," "Darling, I Am growing Old," "Homeless To-Night," "Father Will Settle the Bill," and "St. Patrick's Day in the Morning." Tecumseh hasn't even had a trained monkey! Hudson was modest, but we'll celebrate the Fourth and have a circus besides before the summer's gone.

We congratulate the Gazette upon Hudson's success, and would also remind our contemporary that our circus will arrive next Saturday, a genuine old fashioned, triple-tent, mammoth aggregation, four clown show, with the veritable "missing link," Krao, thrown in without extra charge.

SUMMER SCHOOL.

A summer session of the Normal School of Adrian College has been arranged for, commencing July 20, and lasting six weeks. It will be designed especially to meet the wants of the teachers who wish to qualify themselves for the fall and winter schools. Instruction will be given in the common branches, also in the theory and art of teaching, and in some advanced branches. One of the most interesting features will be a series of daily lectures on subjects of interest to the teacher, to which all members of the school have free admission. Circulars giving particulars may be had by addressing President D. S. Stephens, Adrian, Mich.

THE ALUMNI REUNION

The regular annual reunion of the Tecumseh High School Alumni Society will be held at the Lilley House on Friday evening of next week, June 26th.

As the program will be somewhat lengthy the exercises will begin promptly at 7:30 o'clock P. M., in the dining room of the Lilley House. The literary program will be an excellent one and no pains will be spared by Capt. Foster to provide a suitable supper for the occasion. Supper tickets fifty cents each.

We append the program in full as arranged up to this time.

COL. R. B. ROBBINS COMES HOME.

A successor to Col. Robbins having been appointed as Consul at Ottawa, Ontario, the latter has returned to his home at Adrian. The Ottawa Daily Citizen of the 9th inst., has this to say in regard to Col. Robbins' departure:

Last evening Col. Robbins, who has filled the position of representative of the United States Government at Ottawa during the last four years, was entertained by a number of friends previous to his departure from the city, the Mayor presiding on the occasion. Col. Robbins' leaving the city is the result of the change of Administration which took place at Washington in March last, in consequence of the success of the Democratic party at the polls in November. Col. Robbins was appointed by a Republican administration, and, in accordance with the practice which prevails across the line, with a change of a Government comes the removal of many appointees of the preceding Government, he is now obliged to surrender his position to a supporter of the new Government, of the opposite political party. Col. Robbins came to Ottawa an absolute stranger; he was not acquainted with a resident of Ottawa; no resident of Ottawa knew him. He is now about to leave the city, and he carries with him the best wishes of a number of friends, who regret his departure from their midst. In his official relations with business men he was invariably courteous, ever obliging and anxious to furnish information, and it was always comprehensive and correct. During his residence in the city he has worthily discharged the duties of his position. We have reason to believe that period has been agreeable to Col. Robbins in every respect, and that he leaves Ottawa entertaining the warmest feelings of regard for many of its citizens and carrying with him pleasing recollections of the few years he has resided here.

The poet, Will Carlton, was honored with a magnificent reception at Hudson one evening last week.

The Michigan Mutual Benefit Association of Hillsdale, added 92 new members in March and 125 in April. A good showing.

Adrian Press: Clayton has an "old Hen" club and a "Half Moon" club. Both are said to be composed of females, but now and then there can be found men in that section who bear every indication of being members of the former.

The wool market is opening up quite lively in Tecumseh. Cook & Palmer and H. W. Stevens are buying, the price for good washed wool ranging from 20 to 23 cents. But little wool has been delivered as yet, but a large amount has been contracted for.

OBITUARY.

Peter S. Waldron, the subject of this sketch, was born in the township of Romulus, Seneca Co., N. Y. on the 2d. day of February, 1831, and he passed his life, until he attained his majority, in that vicinity. In the autumn of 1855 he came to Tecumseh. On the 25th of February 1859, he was married to Miss Jane Kishpaugh, who survives him. In April 1859 he purchased and moved upon the farm north of this village, where he continued to reside until his death.

The deceased has been afflicted with poor health for the past few years, but he bore his sufferings with Christian fortitude, and looked forward to his approaching dissolution with a Christian's faith. At the age of nineteen he professed religion, and has ever since been a consistent member of the Baptist Church. At twenty-two years of age he became a member of the masonic fraternity, and upon taking up his abode in Tecumseh, he united with the Tecumseh Lodge, of which Lodge he was an honored member at the time of his death. The fraternity showed their esteem by turning out in large numbers and assisting at the funeral rites.

A good neighbor, a kind husband, an indulgent father, a respected mason, a consistent Christian has passed on to his final reward.

KEEP IT PURE.
The Life is the Blood—Prevent Disease—Surgery the Last Resort—A Telling Letter.
Here is a fact for you to think over, viz: Medical science proves that diseases, no matter how great a variety they seem to have, proceed from comparatively few causes. It is for this reason that some standard medicines relieve or cure so wide a range of complaints—some of them apparently almost directly opposite to their natures. When a medicine of preparation acts at once upon the digestive and urinary organs, and also purifies the blood, the list of difficulties subject to its control is astonishing. But while many things are said to possess this power, those which actually do exert it are very rare.
It is conceded that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y., is the most effective preparation now in use for all diseases arising from a foul or impure state of the circulation. Hence it is more than likely that if the writer of the following letter had habitually taken "Favorite Remedy" ten years ago, he would never have suffered from cancer.
PITTSFIELD, Mass., March 22, 1881.
Dr. David Kennedy,
Dear Sir:—About six years ago I was obliged to resort to external treatment for the removal of a cancerous growth on my lip. On my return home I became sensible that my blood needed a thorough cleansing. My whole system too required toning up. While casting about for the best medicine to do this, your "FAVORITE REMEDY" was so highly recommended in my hearing that I resolved to try it. I did so and the result surprised me, it was effected so quickly and completely. I soon got over the depression produced by the operation and since the "Favorite Remedy," which I have continued to take in small doses, has kept me in such good health and strength as I never had before, not expected to have. It is the best blood purifier in the world. I am sure of that. Yours, etc.,
MATTHEW FARRELL.

In all cases where a consultation is deemed desirable:
Address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.
But if you have not done so, adopt "FAVORITE REMEDY" as a household friend.

MALARIA.
As an anti malarial medicine
DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S
FAVORITE REMEDY
has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fevers in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5, by all druggists.

THE EXCHANGE FIEND.

A Creature Whose Staying Qualities Are Unappreciated Except by Editors.

There is an ancient oriental legend to the effect that once upon a time a modest looking dromedary stuck his head into the sanctum of a daily newspaper and requested to be allowed to glance over the exchanges. The accommodating and gentlemanly editor said: "Certainly, with pleasure," and the result was that in a short time the dromedary was polishing the sacred editorial tripod and had both hoofs on the table, going through the exchanges. When the editor intimated that he felt cramped, the dromedary replied, humorously, that perhaps the editor would feel more untrammeled if he were on the outside.

The moral of this simple little legend is that the proper time to sit down on the exchange fiend is at the opening of the campaign, or else he will be as hard to remove from position as a firmly established mother-in-law.

It is a fact that nobody outside of a newspaper office can understand or appreciate the staying qualities of an exchange fiend. Those who begin the performance with an overture to the effect that they know newspaper men are always busy, hence they will stay but a moment, are the ones that resemble a French clock, they never go. The exchange fiend is always a brilliant conversationalist. Different editors have different campaign plans. Some editors hang up big signs in front of their desks, such as: "Go Home and Tell Us All About It." Others have a picture of a death's head and the legend underneath: "This Man Was Talked to Death." An exchange fiend will read over these admonitions, laugh and say: "You have hit 'em off to a T."

If the editor has only one chair, the fiend will sit down on the editor's desk, or even on the editor himself.

Other people dread the power of the press. Not so the exchange fiend. He has the audacity of the flea that takes his breakfast off the lion's lip. He never realizes his danger.

There was once a Texas newspaper man who ran short of material to write up and who thought it would be a joke to encourage an exchange fiend, just to see how far he would go, and then write it up. So when the exchange fiend walked in, the editor did not go, as usual, and get "Webster's Unabridged," and impressively lay it on the exchanges along with four or five paper weights, to keep the papers from blowing away by the breeze that was not blowing. On the contrary, he told the fiend to help himself. The fiend began to look sassy right off. You could see his cheek harden. He removed his hat, coat, vest, cravat and boots, as if he was going in swimming. Then he went to the editorial coat that was hanging on the rack and hunted for a cigar. In doing so he came across several letters and postal cards. He was considerate enough to read them, holding the borrowed cigar in his mouth all the time. It was evident that the exchange fiend did not require much encouragement, so the editor determined to give him a little sarcasm.

"If there is anything you want that you don't see, just ask for it," said the editor.

The fiend took a puff of the cigar and said:

"Cussed poor cigar. Where did they give them to you? I want to steer clear of that place. By the way, there are some New York papers that I want you to get. Have 'em put on your exchange list. I'll give you a list of the papers I want."

The fiend was perfectly serious; so was the editor, who rallied and remarked with a sneer:

"Don't you want me to turn over the Post-office key to you? Perhaps you would like to open the money-order letters?"

"You do need a business manager, but I fancy you would hardly be able to pay me my price to take hold of your business department."

It became still more evident that this fiend did not require much more encouragement to feel perfectly at ease. Once more the editor's face was wreathed in scorn, as he said:

"I am going to have a telephone put up between this office and your residence, so you will be able to spend some of your time at home."

"This is good enough for me right here, if you will fill a side basket and have some more pegs to hang clothes on," replied the demon, tearing the wrappers off the exchanges.

The amusing feature of this conversation is that it actually took place. It is a peculiarity of the newspaper bore that he is perfectly honest in believing that he is the only visitor to the office who is not a bore, hence any hint you may give him to clear out is taken as the spirit of banter, as if it were pleasantly and not seriously meant for him at all.—Alex Sweet, in Arkansaw Traveler.

AMATEUR NURSING.

A Fond and Fashionable Delusion Dispelled.

Ah, me, how the truth does differ from fiction! Doesn't the hero of novel or play invariably get hurt, if at all, in the way of a broken leg or something that lays him up in a nice, clean manner, compatible with sentimentality? Moreover, isn't it the rule that the heroine, turned nurse, shall find her employment in that capacity made congenial by the duties of smoothing the dear fellow's forehead and reading to him? That's romance. Here's reality. The pastor of my church is an earnest Christian, a practical doer of good, and all that sort of philanthropic thing. He is all the while making up visiting committees for the tenement house poor, cold-victual distribution coteries, and second-hand clothes agencies. He got it into his benevolent head not long ago that some of us girls ought to do amateur nursing in the public hospitals. The idea took well, because we had heard that London aristocratic maidens were practicing it, and he speedily had six enthusiastic volunteers. We went through with a preliminary training to the extent on reading a book of directions of nursing. Then we reported for duty. We were to form a kind of relief gang, each girl to devote one whole day in six to actual attendance in the ward of a certain hospital. Our services were accepted. We drew cuts for turns, and I hit the first day. Early next morning I presented myself, in a very plain but neatly-fitted bib and tucker, to the house physician of the institution. I flattered myself that I was prepared for any fate which duty might impose upon me; but down deep in my heart of hearts I was hopefully expectant of the broken-boned hero of the novel and the play for a patient. What was my joy, therefore, on being assigned to a chap in exactly that line. What I mean is that both his legs and one arm had been fractured. Of course, he wasn't precisely the ideal thing. His brow wasn't as high and white as the fictionist had described, a stubble growth of beard impaired whatever of beauty his face might ordinarily have possessed, and they had stuck him fast in a structure of splints and plaster of paris so that his one immovable position was not picturesque. I was bound to make the best of him, however, and at the first opportunity I suggested that I might read the morning paper to him.

"Unless you want to drive me crazy, young woman," he growled, unaware that I was a volunteer, and not a hired hospital attendant, "you'll kindly keep your tongue quiet."

The shock was something dreadful. I withdrew to a corner and wept. When that was done with I returned to find him asleep and snoring. But I made one additional effort to realize my expectations. On his showing the first signs of awakening, and betraying pain by low sighs (quite romantically), I quietly stroked his fevered brow. He was wide eyed in a minute.

"For heaven's sake don't bang and plow my head," he exclaimed; "I can't stand it."

I have only a vague recollection of how the rest of the day wore wearily away. One of the fondest of my delusions was dispelled; but when the next day's volunteer and I came to compare notes, and she related how she had been allotted the care of an old bummer just over an acute attack of delirium tremens, I concluded that I had been rather fortunate. I'd had a broken-limbed patient, at all events, though his behavior had not been all that I had expected. On the whole, I don't think that amateur nursing has the elements of fashionable popularity.—Clara Belle, in Cincinnati Enquirer.

A TRANSFORMATION.

How a Peaceful Atlantic Liner is Converted Into a War Ship.

The United States was the first nation to improvise a navy of merchant ships. At the outbreak of the rebellion the necessity for an enormous increase of the navy was met by the prompt purchase or charter of steamers of all classes, even the peaceful ferry-boat being transformed into a man-of-war, some of these vessels being turned to excellent account, especially for the river and inland water service.

The suspicion of war with Russia in 1878 led the Czar's Government to see the advantage of swift cruisers, and the American mercantile steam navy was drawn upon to furnish two such commerce destroyers. Their services were not needed. The effect of this action was to teach the British what a powerful weapon they had at hand. Acting on the hint, it has to-day about 350 such vessels from which to choose as commerce protectors. The Atlantic fleet has been drawn upon for this purpose, and one of the most notable of these, the National Line America, has been finished for the new service and is nearly ready for commission as a war vessel. It is a new navy, of which she is the pioneer, and the details of her conversion can not fail to be of interest. Messrs. Laird, of Alabama notoriety, are the adapters of this ship, one of the finest of the Atlantic squadron, which had accommodations for 1,750 passengers. The America is built of steel, and has thirteen water-tight compartments, any two of which can keep her afloat. The passenger accommodation has been swept away. By so doing she can now accommodate 2,000 men. This seeming paradox is explained by the fact that the luxuries of ocean travel are not necessary for the conveyance of troops, and the America may be used as an armed transport. The armament of this new war vessel is peculiar and adapted to her build. Two five-inch guns are placed on either bow on the forecastle; six sixty-four-pounders are placed in other parts of the vessel. On the poop two other five inch guns of the same character as at the bows are placed. The four five-inch guns thus placed forward and aft are in very exposed positions, but their great range of over 150 degrees is the compensating gain. They have a direct fire over bow and stern, and as they will be able to work around to fifty-eight degrees toward midships it will be difficult for any hostile vessel to escape their range. The sixty-four-pounders, three on a side, will each have a range of ninety degrees, and will thus command the whole broadside of the ship.

Six Nordenfeldt Mitrailleuse or machine guns are on the upper deck, and four pinnaces, specially adapted to torpedo work, make up the armament to this vessel, which will be the champion for the new class of vessels thus withdrawn from the peaceful passenger traffic to take her place as a regular ship-of-war of the British navy.

The Etruria, Umbria and Oregon of the Cunard Line, and the Alaska of the Union, are also being fitted. The armament varies, according to the peculiar construction of the several vessels, but is of the same general character.—Boston Globe.

—One of the trustees of the Providence Public Library, who is a well-meaning man, has made a scrap-book of the adventures of runaway boys as related in the newspapers. His object is to warn young readers of the masculine gender against the pursuit of knowledge in vicious dime novels.—Providence Journal.

"What's the Matter With You?"

"Well, not much in particular. But I'm a little ailing all over. I don't sleep well, and my kidneys are out of order, and I cant enjoy my meals, and I've a touch of rheumatism, and once in a while a twinge of neuralgia." Now, neighbor, you seem to want a general fixing up, and the thing to do it is Brown's Iron Bitters. Mr. A. J. Pickrell, of Ennis, Texas, says, "I was a sickly man. Brown's Iron Bitters made me healthy and strong."

Have had a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven booxes Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well." Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25c. per box by C. A. Wright & Co.

C. A. Wright & Co. would specially recommend to the ladies Acker's Dyspepsia Tablets. As a laxative they have no equal. They are guaranteed to cure Chronic Constipation, Dyspepsia, and all diseases arising from a deranged stomach. With a free use of the Tablets, Sick Headache is impossible.

CHOLERA is rapidly moving westward and will soon appear in this country. In order to prevent disastrous effects from its ravages every preventive should be employed, and the system should be in perfect condition. At this season of the year the system is in a weak state and easily susceptible to dangerous disease. Pain in the back, weariness, lassitude, headache, dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver complaints are but the result of neglect. During the last visitation of cholera to this country no medicine was found equal to Mishler's Herb Bitters, both as a preventive and cure, and it has been equally successful in all the diseases above mentioned. It renews and invigorates the blood, restoring to health and strength, and thus shielding the system from disease.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

Dr. L. S. Crotser of Edmore, Mich., has been a guest of Charles Priest for the past week.

Mrs. Starr died at her home last Thursday. She had been sick for several weeks, but had not been confined to her bed until quite recently. Her sons, George, Charles and Henry Starr came here to attend her funeral. The services were held at the house Saturday at four o'clock. Rev. Barnes officiating.

Several Masons from the Clinton Lodge went to Blissfield last Monday afternoon, for the purpose of conferring degrees.

Prof. Laflin went to Tecumseh last Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Johnston of Detroit, are visiting Clinton friends.

Born—On Thursday, June 18th, 1885, to Mrs. Hattie Johnston, a boy.

Mrs. R. O. Randall, Mrs. F. D. Lancaster and Mrs. Frank Thompson, visited Tecumseh last Saturday.

J. B. Hause attended the funeral of Mrs. Warner in Franklin last Tuesday.

The meeting of the Lenawee County Horticultural Association at the Town Hall last Friday was quite a success. Many guests from neighboring towns were present.

Prof. I. B. Laflin has obtained a situation as traveling salesman during his summer vacation. Mrs. Laflin intends visiting friends near Ypsilanti for a few weeks and from there will go to Corunna, to visit her mother and sister.

Last Thursday evening Mrs. Dwight Kies and son Harry, and Charles Goodrich had started to come to town from Mr. Kies' farm, when the horse became frightened and commenced to run. Mr. Goodrich, thinking he would be able to manage him better by being on the ground, jumped out of the buggy and caught hold of the bit. The horse shook him off and again started to run. Mrs. Kies realizing their danger if they remained in the buggy, told her little boy to jump out, which he did, and she attempted to follow, but it was some time before she reached the ground. Soon after she had jumped out the horse fell and the buggy was thrown clear over him. Mrs. Kies has quite a severe cut on the head and was considerably bruised, but will be well in a few days. Mr. Goodrich considers himself quite fortunate in getting nothing worse than a broken shoulder.

J. E. McCollum went to Detroit last Tuesday. He returned Wednesday.

ADDISON ATOMS.

Our physicians still report considerable sickness in the community.

The celebrated Buckeye harvesting machinery is now on sale by Caleb Kempton. His warehouse is located next to Curtis' Bank.

Numerous of our citizens will take in the sights at Adrian during the Fourth of July.

Armstrong & Son is the name of the new grocery firm that succeeds Mr. Harvey Dayton at the Harrington block.

Power & Son are preparing to erect a fine new building on the site on which their drug store was burned last winter.

After a stay of nearly a quarter of a century at the Smith Block our village postoffice is at last removed to a new building prepared for its special accommodation. The building is now located just north of the old stand but will be moved on Main street as soon as Mr. Underwood, the post master, can make it convenient to do so.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

The cold wave struck us Monday.

Don't put away your ulsters yet.

A fine rain Sunday afternoon.

Almost a frost Monday night, the shortest night of the year.

Boys, take courage. Sunday evenings grow longer now.

Strawberries are quite plentiful in these parts.

A good many went to Tecumseh on Saturday to see the circus parade.

A party of married folks from Dist. No. 5, went to Wampler's Lake Saturday.

Working on the street is the order now and they are doing a fine job at the M. & O. crossing.

Fred Jones spent Sunday with his brother, Warren.

Mr. Haight and T. H. Temple returned from Kalkaska Saturday and report a fine time fishing, etc.

Clarence Jackson celebrated his seventh birthday by giving his friends a lawn party Monday afternoon, and served them with ice cream, cake, &c.

Mrs. Susan Clark has improved her pleasant home by taking away the street fence.

Mrs. Fred Pocklington, of Hillsdale, visited friends here last week.

Alfred Richard and family, of Dundee, visited relatives and friends Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. Samuel Barlow is in Adrian this week during the College commencement. Belle will graduate in music at this time.

Children's day was largely attended morning and evening. The exercises were very interesting. The church was very handsomely decorated with ferns, flowers, &c., and the birds seemed to enjoy the occasion very much.

Excursion train over the M. & O. to Devil's Lake next Sunday. Round trip from here only 45 cents.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

A consignment of tree sellers keeps our piety from retrograding, and Bohemian oat buyers wear a Good Lord Deliver Us expression on their faces, not in harmony with croquet. The oats are not as conspicuous as the notes given in exchange for them.

No definite plan for celebrating the Fourth has been presented to the Council, but the rink at Wampler's Lake is near enough to the base of accidents to satisfy those inclined to drown.

There is just trade enough to prevent dealers from going raving distracted; but the soldier's home is enveloped in silence, not only here but all over the state. If old maxims are true, a big mole is burrowing somewhere.

There is considerable sickness and diptheria quite near.

A graduating class of seven will be pelted with flowers Friday evening, and after that all mischief will be promptly attended to without extra charge, until next September.

A cold wave has come but does not discourage our legions of birds. I do not know about other places, but our robins outnumber all birds that have visited us within five years, and all other kinds are largely represented.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Geo. M. Beckler, of Petersburg, is visiting his son J. P. Beckler. He is a hale old man of seventy-nine.

Mrs. Wilhemina Osterhout lost a fine horse last Saturday. The horse broke its leg while in the field.

Our school closed last Friday with a well prepared program by the children. Miss Brown has given good satisfaction.

Farmers say that chess is pretty plenty in the wheat. Corn grows rapidly in spite of the cool nights. Oats are promising a fine crop.

Dr. Hallock's house is getting along and promises to be an ornament to the place.

Now the petitions circulate freely, almost every body has one in his hand, either to sign or to be signed. The post office is the cause. The post master has moved and every one wants the place.

Cassell's Family Magazine for July

A large girl playing lawn-tennis is the subject of the frontispiece of the July number of Cassell's Family Magazine. The serial story, "A Diamond in the Rough," opens the feast and introduces us to several exciting situations. A new serial, "My Namesake Marjorie," is begun in this number and gives every promise of sustaining the reputation of this magazine for good serial stories. There are besides several shorter stories, whose plots may be digested at a sitting. Then we have subjects of scientific information discussed for our improvement: "what the Sun is Made of," with careful illustrations, by Ray Woods. The second of Karl Blind's papers on "Dr. Schliemann's Discoveries at Tiryns," and "Flemish Laces," with exceptionally fine engravings from specimens of their work. Then we have a most attractive article "A Fair Canoeist," describing the first trip made by a lady around Flambro' Head in a canoe. The picture showing this point of chalky cliff and the water swirling around it does not look an inviting place to paddle around a canoe. "J. Cuthbert Hadden has an article on Geo. Frederick Handel; and the Family Doctor has a timely article on hay-fever. "A Glimpse of New York and Central Park" is given by Catherine Owen, and we have a second paper on "How to make Home Beautiful" The Paris correspondents's "Chit-chat on Dress" is not the least of the valuable papers in the magazine, while "The Gather" is, as usual, full of bits of practical information on the scientific progress of the day.—Cassell & Company, Limited, $1.50 a year.

The Union School Furniture Company of Battle Creek have walked off with the highest awards at the New Orleans Exposition. They made four entries, viz: The "Automatic" School Seat; the new Standard Crayon; the the Valveless Air Pump; and on general display. They captured the highest award on each entry.

THE COUNTY HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

A Large and Interesting Meeting Held at Clinton on Friday Last.

The June meeting of the County Horticultural Society was postponed until the strawberry season and was held on Friday of last week at Clinton. The attendance was good, not only from Clinton, but from other parts of the county. Through the kindness of the Secretary, S. B. Mann, we are enabled to give our readers a full report of the meeting.

President Woodward called the session to order promptly at ten o'clock, and the exercises were opened with a piece of vocal music by a Clinton quartette.

The first business was a question by Peter Coller, who opened by saying he had found a small black worm on his grapevines, that was doing much damage, and asked what to do with them?

Mr. Sigler said the best thing was to pick them off, and kill them.

Mr. Coller had killed them with hellebore with some success. There was no trouble reported from this locality.

S. B. Mann said he had been worried about the maple bark louse, on his grapevines, but they seemed less abundant this year than last.

Mr. Moony had about the same experience.

Mr. Randall asked if "trimming grapes in the fall added to the danger of winter killing the vines."

D. G. Edmiston said if he could not lay vines down he left them untrimmed till spring.

President Woodward trimmed his vines thoroughly last fall, and those that he left up in the trellis were almost all killed.

Mrs. Remington asked "the best time to trim grapes?"

Mr. Edmiston said he had of late years left the trimming till spring, but preferred to trim in the fall, if he laid the vines down. But he had lately left them on the trellis, and trimmed those not killed in the spring. He named a number of varieties that were killed with the severe winter. He would trim as soon as warm weather comes in the spring, as early as can be done, but they might be trimmed up to the starting of the buds. If in the fall, as soon as the leaves are off. Grapes laid down should have a very light covering, if any, but he would weight them down.

Mr. Sigler trimmed in the fall, and thought there was very little choice as to which time was best.

Mr. Mooney usually trimmed in the fall. He, too, found many of his vines killed down to the ground.

Mr. F. J. Hough had a Concord that he trimmed late this spring, and it was making a vigorous growth and full of fruit. He had supposed the Concord would stand almost any degree of cold.

Mr. Mann asked if there was any way to preserve the Prentice vine through these cold winters.

Mr. Edmiston thought there was no way to save the Prentice except by covering. He also said of the Pocklington grape, that though it was not called hardy, it was, in most cases, hardy. But there were many vines sold on the market for the Pocklington which were not genuine, but a cheat.

President Woodward had latterly trimmed late in the spring, after the vines are well started, and he had large crops.

Mr. Billmyer asked "why some vines were killed in some localities and not in others?"

Mr. Sigler said that his on light sand were almost all killed. The locality had very much to do with that.

Mr. Gibson replied that elevation and culture had much to do with the life of the grape. The higher the location, the better.

Mrs. Remington asked "how many varieties there were that would stand the winters here?"

Mr. Edmiston said there were probably four hundred varieties that would stand our winters as well as the Concord. He had over fifty varieties, and they had all borne fruit. There are said to be over seven hundred varieties known, but of course many of them were valueless.

It was asked if there was any trouble with the seventeen-year locust?

Mr. Hough replied that the locusts did no damage by eating, but they sting the branches, and those drop off. You should watch your trees, or they will very much injure them. They will last from four to six weeks. It is the last year's growth that is injured.

Mr. Palmer had had some experience in Ohio with this insect. In 1847 they destroyed many young trees. Other years, when they had appeared, they had done less damage.

Adjourned to one o'clock.

LOCAL HOSPITALITY.

The ladies and good people of Clinton had provided, in the hall, a bounteous dinner, and the visitors, especially those who had made an early start, and taken a hasty breakfast, did ample justice to it. There was a fine show of strawberries and apples. The Clinton people are perfectly at home entertaining their friends.

Among those exhibiting fruit were Wm. Wicham, of Adrian, five varieties of strawberries; J. H. Billmyer, of Raisin, one variety of apples—the small Romanite; B. W. Steere, Adrian, two varieties of apples— the Willow Twig and the Ben Davis; D. R. Gibson, Clinton, four, varieties of strawberries and a sample of honey; David Woodward, one variety of strawberries.

AT THE AFTERNOON SESSION

there was an increased attendance.

The first business of the afternoon session was a renewal of the question box. First came "the English sparrow, in the future of horticulture?"

Mr. L. D. Watkins, of Manchester, said that in England they are destroying the small fruit and grain.

Mr. Coller said that a neighbor of his caught them with small fish hooks baited.

Mr. Hough claimed that they had not as yet done any damage, and were confined to the city.

A number of men sprang to their feet at once. Among them was Mr. Palmer, who was anxious to have them destroyed.

Mr. Sigler had killed them with grain soaked in water with strychnine.

The best three varieties of strawberries for market and family use was the next question.

Mr. Wickham said the Manchester, Green Prolific and Wilson.

Mr. Gibson gave, as his opinion, the Crescent, Wilson and Kentucky.

B. I. Laing choose the Monarch of the West, Crescent Seedling and the Wilson.

The best single variety was the next question. The old Wilson seemed to be a universal favorite. The present prospect of the apple crop came next.

Mr. Billmyer reported that the trees blossomed very full, but the crop will be small, if any at all.

Mr. Laing expected very few, and Mr. Coller a very poor crop.

Mr. Cress had been through his orchard, and found less than a dozen apples.

"The Rose bug," was the next question, and Mr. Strong said white hellebore and pyrethrum would kill them.

"The squash bug" was next discussed, and Mr. S. B. Mann said Paris green used the same as on potatoes, had killed them for him.

President Woodward had used it with the same result.

Mr. Wickham had driven off the squash bug with coal ashes.

Mr. Bilmyer used London purple and air-slacked lime.

Mr. Calhoun had used the old Connecticut remedy of soot, from the chimney.

Various other remedies were given. Mr. Hamilton had been successful with Paris green for bugs.

"The best soils for strawberries" was asked next.

Mr. Coller said clay loam; Mr. Laing black, gravelly loam; others gave sand.

E. H. Allis gave the New York fruit growers' experience, on clay soil.

"The best soil for grapes?"

Mr. Sigler had grown grapes on sandy soil only, but had success.

Mr. Edmiston said the wine growers on the lake shore, would give more a pound for grapes grown on clay than if grown on sand. He had only clay soil. He admitted that good grapes could be grown on sand, but better on clay.

N. J. Strong corroborated this view.

Mr. Hough said much depended on richness. He had grapes on both clay and sand. The best soil no doubt was clay.

"The best soil for pears?" was next asked.

Mr. Coller was the first to answer, and said clay soil was the best for all fruits.

Mr. Hough said clay was much the best for pears.

Mr. Gibson preferred all clay—the harder the better.

Mr. Watkins asked Mr. Coller how pears grew in Florida. He said he saw beautiful pear trees there on that white sand.

"The best position for avoiding the frost of winter and drouth of summer?"

Mr. Coller gave as his opinion, a northern slope.

Mr. Billmyer said his peach orchard was on two sides of a north and south ridge. Those trees on the west side were dead; on the east side they were alive and doing well.

Mr. Watkins said that his orchard had a west slope and a great exposure. His trees were in bad shape.

Mr. Randall asked "the cause, and remedy, for yellows on blackberries."

Mr. Wickham said burn them.

Mr. N. J. Strong offered the following resolution, which was carried:

Resolved, That the Horticultural Society of Lenawee county tender to the ladies of Clinton and vicinity, their hearty thanks for the sumptuous manner in which they have entertained us at this, our first meeting with them in their village; also, the singers for their fine singing.

"The work of mice on trees in winter," was the next topic, and was discussed to a good length, various remedies being given.

E. P. Allis had on exhibition a fine lot of mounted locusts, and they were examined with much interest.

Mr. Edmiston moved that the meeting ajourn to the first Wednesday in August. Carried.

Few things are more facinating in their way than a study of the subterranean history of man, whether in caves or in mounds, whether it be to corroborate written history, or to take testimony that ante-dates all writing. President Barlett, of Dartmouth, contributes an interesting article on this topic to the July number of the North American Review. The other articles are one by Gail Hamilton on Prohibition in practice, and one by Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst on the decline of Christianity. These, with the batch of Free hand Comments, make up a number of unusual interest. If the allotted age of man were sufficient for a magazine, we might have to part here with an old friend; for the Review has just completed its seventieth year. But outwardly it renews its youth with a new cover, and inwardly it seems more vigorous than ever.

Doris' circus came from Marshall on a special train of their own. The train comprises twenty-two cars, each of which is sixty feet in length. This train of itself makes quite an imposing show.

THE HOUSEMOTHER.

To Be Housemother and Housework Is Like Being President and Running All the Departments at the Same Time

Spencer [illegible] down as an axiom that before [illegible] a thing fully [illegible] [illegible] departments at the same time.

[illegible] order in the kitchen department [illegible] and pantry, and to save the table from a disorderly appearance [illegible] be well [illegible]. One can not be expected to make something out of nothing. In the kitchen most especially there should always be "a place for everything and everything in its place," so that should an article be needed at any time of the day or night when the moments are of importance, it can be instantly found. The storeroom should be as tidy and fly as possible. A window opening out of doors and a screen over the doors will secure a draught of fresh air. There are some table supplies that may be bought in quantities with a certain saving of expense, others which require to be frequently renewed from a liability to become musty. Some that will spoil in one kind of weather and keep perfectly well in another kind. A good cookery book will enlighten the young housewife on the subject, and give her the advantage of theoretical knowledge while she is learning practically. Domestic economy requires constant study and attention, the smallest relaxation of attention, and the income, if limited, is liable to be exceeded before one is aware of it.

One should always buy for every, not the very best article. If for wear [illegible] will be not only profit in the saving of money, for they will wear three times as long as the cheaper goods, but there will also be the comfort that the wearing of the best grades of goods always proves. Besides every one knows the refining influence of good and well made garments. To exemplify. Years ago at a certain military post near a village the men who were all well [illegible] in the village were curious [illegible] [illegible] disgraceful row. The [illegible] leaded on midnight [illegible] that no one should go to the village except full dress uniform. The effect for was marvelous. No more drunken more row. The full dress was the man's sobriety.

I wander from my immediate subject, but the housemother and we hold the privilege of making everything a part of her theme, all conspiring to one end, the faithful representation or exemplification of things to be pondered in the heart or mind of the young housewife, who has, perhaps, [illegible] attained the dignity of housemother.

Being in the kitchen department today I will give the young housewife a glimpse of what in my very childhood was to me the beau ideal of a kitchen. It was a large, airy room, with deep window seats and with doors on either side, one side opening on a broad veranda, beyond which the grass sloped down to the edge of a brook bordered with pine and hemlock. On the opposite side the same deep set windows looked into an old-fashioned flower garden, where tufts of [illegible] sweet-William and all the old favorites flourished, and where bunches of peppermint, sage, thyme, pennyroyal, chamomile, catnip, fennel and other herbs grew and flourished. Within the kitchen, [illegible] across the pale gray floor, an old-time looking glass, a tall clock in a corner above its face a ship tossing restlessly on the green waves, behind glass doors were shelves of burnished tinware and shining china, and in a large open fireplace was always a great bed of coals ready for covered spiders and gridirons.

By one of the deep windows was the housekeeper's easy chair, her table and work-basket. Inside the deep, flaring window, and just above the reach of small hands, hung what might be called a series of pockets, made of blue and scarlet, a strip about half a yard long and four or five inches wide, with a small pincushion at the top and a few flannel bits for needles, below three or four pockets for thread, tape, buttons—all the little things so constantly needed. The white ruffled curtains were looped back, a screen shielded the spot from the heat of the fire. No odor of cookery pervaded the place. The wide-throated fireplace took all to itself, save when the old-fashioned oven was opened, and the cakes and pies were taken out and set upon the long table. A very small child then loved to sit in those deep window seats and read tales of fairies or books of travels. Things unknown, whether fanciful or real, always had an especial charm.

And I would say, now and here, that I believe in cultivating the imagination. Nothing so helps the housemother, amid the cares and troubles and turmoil of her life, as a well-trained imagination, one cultivated to see beauties where none exist, rather than to see the disagreeables of life. Imagination is a good thing to have, and a judicious mother is of all the one most needed in its cultivation, for the culture is most successful in the early days of childhood.

In a city house it is somewhat difficult, often impossible, to have a kitchen such as one would desire to have, for the reason that houses are ordinarily built more for show than for comfort, but much may be done to remedy the builder's faults. Should there be a nice pantry, a good range, a good-sized window and the outer door half-glass, one may do wonders with taste and care. Two screw eyes, a brass or iron rod, on which a curtain may be drawn, will serve to hide the water faucets and the sink when not in use. Wire screens to door and window for summer, and with skill it may be made a very comfortable place to work in. But beware of a dark underground kitchen, such as are too often provided. The best kind are on a level with the ground opening into the garden plot, with flowers and greenery to rest eyes that are weary over a hot range. Then it will be pleasant, and whatsoever gives comfort, brings happiness, and happiness in the kitchen department means comfort in the household.—Boston Ledger.

KINDNESS TO HORSES.

The Value of the Horse Dependent Largely on Kind Treatment.

The value of [illegible] animal, the [illegible] depends [illegible] kind [illegible] than [illegible]. If we go upon the busiest streets in cities, or upon the most travelled roads in the country, we shall soon see such treatment of this faithful servant as shows [illegible] ignorant many of the [illegible] how to best profit by his labor. They have no [illegible] comprehension of the horse than [illegible] that his best effort can only be [illegible] by the whip. In this respect the horse is much wiser than his driver. One who has studied the animal can see at once that the horse [illegible] makes a pretense of doing his best. He knows he is abused, and he takes his own way to get even with his ignorant, brutal driver. The horse is capable of strong attachment, and will always do his best for the driver that has gained his confidence by kindness. The whip is seldom used by such a driver. His word is all the horse need. Balky and unmanageable horses are nearly always made so by bad and [illegible] drivers. We have [illegible] horses that would draw the last pound for a kind driver, but would not draw the empty wagon for one who had abused them.

Horses are often spoiled in breaking by the want of judgment in the trainer. The horse naturally has strong confidence in man. Colts should always learn that the judgment of the trainer is correct. In learning to draw, they should never be hitched to anything they can not easily move, and if this is kept up they will soon have perfect confidence in their capacity to pull any load they are hitched to. A team so broken can be relied upon to do their very best in an emergency. Such a team is worth fifty per cent. more for service than one that has been broken by the haphazard driver, who does not think it can do any harm if he ties them to a load which they can not pull. But, having been set, they will draw with less courage next time, and when set a few times will expect to be set every time, and will be good only for a load of half their capacity. There is too large a proportion of horses that do their work inefficient work. Some teams, originally well broken, are spoiled by bad drivers afterward. The unfortunate point is, that everybody is apt to think himself a good driver. Some appear to regard driving merely as knowing which rein to pull for direction of the team. Too many common drivers come too near the last description.

To be an expert in using the spade in ditching requires practice under the eye of an expert—how much more, then, does the art of driving horses require practice under an expert? All drivers to be entrusted with a valuable team of horses should be educated for the business. The driver should not only know how to handle the reins, but how to feed and groom his team. No loud and boisterous talk to horses should be permitted. Such always excites the temper of the horse, and if he has not already been spoiled, he soon will be. We had, for many years, a small, gray pony, that had an easy gait of three minutes, was remarkably intelligent, would cheerfully do anything within his power for one who treated him kindly, but would do nothing for one who yelled at him, or treated him in a boisterous way. Have known him to refuse to draw a buggy for one who treated him roughly, but when spoken to by one he liked was all obedience. We found one of our men forcibly trying in a loud way to haul a load with him on a cart, heavy enough for two horses, but he would not straighten the chains. Reprimanding the man for his want of judgment and rough manner, we patted the pony, spoke gently to him, and he pulled the load to the place desired, but the man could not get him to draw the empty cart back to the barn. The pony was never known to refuse a service when well treated. Women could drive him safely about cars; in fact, he was for some ten years, when occasion required, sent home alone from the railway station, some two miles, with parcels in the wagon, and he always came safely. The horse is perhaps our most intelligent animal, and if we would get the best service from him, we must respect his intelligence, and feed him judiciously and generously.—National Live Stock Journal.

A MILLIONAIRE'S APPETITE.

Jay Gould Eats Only What a Poor Man May Enjoy.

We have learned from a personal interview what Jay Gould eats chiefly.

"Plain meats and vegetables, good bread and butter, good milk, sometimes porridge or grits for breakfast satisfy me," he says. "As you may suppose, I find my time filled up pretty well with business, and I certainly find that I can get along better when my food is the plainest of the plain. I have never lost my fondness for the country food I used to be accustomed to in my boyhood, and I think I could relish one of those midnight melons as well now as I did then, although I should probably eat it at a different time. Elaborate dinners are terrible things. I remember once being at one and eating some dish, I forget the name of it, which was very good, but after which I was sick for a week. Now when I go to them I take a little soup if it is plain, a piece of roast meat or game, and some plain potatoes, if I can get them. If not, some peas or in fact any vegetable, provided it is without sauce, for I have found that these sauces, which they put on what would otherwise be good, spoil the food—at least for me. For the rest of the time I sit at the table, play with something on my plate and pass the time as well as I can."—Cook.

MISSES' WASH DRESSES.

Selections Suitable for Young Ladies' Attire in Warm Weather.

For misses' wash dresses and selections for morning are Scotch ginghams, percales, linen lawns and prints of nice quality in small figures, bar, or stripes. As these dresses are to endure hard usage and to be frequently washed, it is poor economy to buy any but the best qualities for them. The yoke waist, belted, and worn with a plain round skirt tucked above the hem, is a favorite design for such dresses, and one easily laundried. The yoke may be tucked, or else striped with insertion; the belt may also be of insertion, and a sash bow attached to the back is made of the material tucked across the ends, and edged with scalloped embroidery. Other print dresses of white or ecru grounds striped with blue or red, or else with tapestry-like figures printed upon them, are made with pleated or shirred waists that are belted only on the sides. Girls of twelve or fourteen years wear their dresses buttoned behind, while those of fifteen or sixteen may fasten theirs in front, though many young ladies of seventeen or eighteen have their prettiest dresses of white veiling or of cashmere, fastened behind. For afternoon and evening dresses misses wear white mull dresses with shirring around the neck and above and below the belt. With this is a house-maid skirt tucked almost to the shirring, or else made plainer with perhaps two or three ruffles at the foot edged with Valenciennes lace. A sash of striped or of watered ribbon completes this dress. Sprigged muslins and dotted Swiss muslins are made in the same way, but are trimmed with embroidered ruffles.

The jauntiest jackets of red, blue, or golden brown serge are made for young girls to wear on cool days. The bright poppy red serge is made into a double-breasted jacket that may be either loose or tight in front; it is much shorter behind than in front, and has no pleats in the back. The stitchings in rows are trimming enough for this gay jacket, which will be exceedingly pretty with all light summer dresses. The blue serge jackets are similarly made, and trimmed with white Hercules braid, while the light brown sacques have either gilt or ecru mohair braid in many narrow rows.

Pretty white muslin and linen lawn dresses for misses are made with a fitted basque that is worn with a belt of velvet ribbon that has a bow on the side. The skirt has two gathered flounces, tucked, and edged with scalloped embroidery. White nuns' veiling remains in favor for nice dresses, and is made with a plain cuirass waist buttoned or laced behind, fitting as smoothly as a jersey, and worn with a skirt laid in pleats, on which are many rows of narrow white satin ribbon. A wide sash may complete such a dress for a stout girl, but for a slender figure there should be an apron over-skirt that is merely a Greek apron in front, with sash loops and ends behind.—Harper's Bazar.

THE HOME.

We Can Not Do Too Much to Make It Attractive.

"If home is everything, then we can not do too much to make it attractive. The man who says mere use is enough and beauty is folly, deserves only to be classed with the cattle he feeds, who have as much sentiment as he has. We are past that low line in our civilization where it is tolerated to say that anything that will answer is good enough. We want something more and better. Mere substance is not life. If it is, then what do the promises of immortal existence amount to. A home is, or ought to be, more than a stopping place merely, a place to eat, drink and sleep in. It should be the nursery of all gentle thoughts and loving affections. It should first develop the finer elements in our natures, and then bind them together around a fixed center. Home is the nucleus of all future growth and goodness. It is the center of all our affections. It is the abode of contentment and peace. Therefore it is a spot to be adorned, within and without, to the uttermost; to be made pleasant and beautiful; to be embowered in trees and sheltered with verdurous shrubbery; to be made inviting externally with a carpet of green grass, borders of fragrant flowers, and festoons of growing vines. Within, woman's tender care and refined instinct will convert it into an elysium, we do not care how plain it is or how scant the resources for embellishment.

No one possesses so many opportunities for making home an earthly paradise as the man who has it in the country. Sun, air, water, grass, trees, flowers, all are at his hand, and almost without money or price. He has more things to create an ideal home out of than any one else who could be named. Yet he seems as a rule to throw them all away, wasting his life in a covetous impatience at not having his lines cast in pleasanter places. If he could see it, and would make the most of it, he has it in his power to make all men envy him. No man's home can possibly be made more attractive than his. No man can live a life of such beautiful plainness, such sweet and wholesome simplicity, such ideal independence, such nearness to nature, our common mother, such domestic integrity and undisturbed repose. As the family is called the unit of the state, so is the home the foundation of organized society and the hope of developing civilization. Can we any of us show too much devotion to it? Can we betray too great fondness for it? Can we expend either effort or means, thought or taste, upon it without being sure of getting an immeasurably large return? To plant a shrub, a tree, a flower, or a vine is an easy thing; but each of these adds a daily beauty and grace to home that grows with a secret power in the heart and holds us faster by the ties of kindred affection.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that, can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this is neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies, are produced by it.

SCROFULA

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alterative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs and rejuvenating the entire system. This great AMERICAN HUMOR.

Statistics Showing the Decline of this Peculiar Native Production.

To the casual observer it might appear that American humor was in as flourishing condition as ever; that, notwithstanding the heavy drafts which it has sustained during the last decade, the supply was still abundant, not to say inexhaustible.

But such, alas! is not the fact, as can be conclusively shown by the presentation of statistics carefully prepared, at considerable expense, and which will be given in detail farther on.

The most serious evidence of the decline in our National humor is shown in the paucity of fresh subjects; there having been in the first four months of 1885 but eleven new subjects used in the construction of newspaporial wit, against forty-seven in the corresponding four months of last year; and while several topics which were once under constant treatment have sunk into desuetude and are now no more heard than if they had never been, it is also true that scores of other favorite marks for the shafts of the funny men have shown a gradual falling off in paragraphic favor.

The stove-pipe joke is a notable instance of the former class just alluded to, the class which has utterly disappeared. This mirth-excitant, which in the year 1875 reached the marvelous proportions of 2,764 paragraphs per month, or 33,168 during the entire year, had fallen off in 1884 to 95 per month, or 380 during the first four months of the year, while for the corresponding period of 1885 but 17 cases have been recorded, an average of only 4¼ per month.

A similar, though not so excessive, falling off is shown by many other old stand-bys; notably, the mother-in-law, the cake of soap on the stairs, the oldest Mason, and so forth. But we have the figures handy. Let us consult them.

During the first third of 1884 the mother-in-law formed the subject of 4,987 paragraphs or articles, whereas the corresponding term of the present year can boast of but 215, and 214 of these are essentially repetitions. Goat and the circus poster, 1884, 3,864; 1885, 24. Oldest Mason, 1884, 841; 1885, 53. And here are several more, the first figure indicating the number of times a joke was utilized from January to April, both inclusive, in 1884, and the second figure referring to the number of appearances during the first four months of the present year:

Messenger boy, 4,231, 4,209; oyster, 1774, 797; dude, 5,649, 34; hair in the butter, 1,423, 6 (which, by the way, is six times too many); big hat at the theatre, 1,262, 48; game of poker, 1,812, 185; whisky drinking, 4,831, 3,569; boarding-house hash, 3,112, 124; strong butter, 2,076, 111 (oleomargarine not included); Chicago girl's over-nutrition of pedal extremities, 3,125, 2,008; cake of soap on stairs, 488, 21; coal-hole cover, 976, 43; banana skin, 816, 27; editor and poet, 3,265, 2,093; green apples, 4, 1 (not in season); iceman, 4,981, 2,605; plumber, 9,871, 6,432; picnic, 401, 30 (rush usually comes later); Niagara hackman, 776, 614; bent pin, 7,671, 2,434; umbrella, 7,841, 2,432; watermelon (out of season), 148, 125.

In almost every instance it will be seen that there has been great disparity in the present year's figures as compared with those of the year preceding. The messenger boy, it is true, has very nearly held his own, and no excessively marked falling off is noticed in whisky drinking or the Chicago girl's feet. The wonderful divergence which is shown in the figures relating to the dude is to be explained by the fact that he was a novelty in the paragraphic field last year; but, thank heaven, he is a short-lived creature, as our statistics show, and haply after another year he shall be heard of no more forever.

Jokes on love-making, matrimony, millinery, twins, divorce and kindred accidents, inseparable from one's earthly pilgrimage, hold their time-honored places. They always have been and always will be, world without end; therefore it has not been thought worth while to collect data regarding them. And for other but equally cogent reasons, no notice has been taken of alleged witticisms on deaths by drowning or other adventitious means. Neither has any account been made of poronomasia. Punning is not joking, and a new pun is well-nigh an impossibility.

From our statistics, then, it will be seen that there has been a marked decline in almost every department of American humor: and we have by no means exhausted the evidence which we have at hand. We have only given a few samples of a very large invoice, which we might draw upon almost without limit.

But in this general decline it is pleasant to know that there is one subject at least which has come forward to partially make up for what has been lost. Need we say we refer to the roller skate? During the first four months of 1884 the roller skate was the foundation of but three paragraphs; during the corresponding period of 1885 it has furnished the raison d'etre of 17,864 witticisms of different lengths and of various quality. Therefore, providing there shall be no increase in the monthly returns (and the probabilites all point in an opposite direction) there will be, during the entire year, 214,368 mirthful allusions to the skating rink set before the readers of American newspapers.

Finally, then, while deploring the decline of American humor in general, let us thank Heaven and take courage, in view of the marvelous possibilities presented by the roller skates, and let us all pray that this last bulwark of our Nation's wit may forever withstand the wear and tear of time and the strain of constant and continual use.—Boston Transcript.

—A young man became involved in a difficulty, and in an evil moment accepted a challenge. At the railroad station he said anxiously to the ticket agent: "Did a couple of gentlemen buy tickets for R—— within a short time?" "Yes, sir," said the agent. "They went to the lunch-counter and ordered gunpowder tea and rare roast beef, with plenty of blood gravy, and then bought two tickets to R—— and return." "And return! By thunder!" gasped the young man to his second. "I guess I'd better apologize."—N. Y. Sun.

Cleanliness.

The surface of the human body, and even the delicate membrane covering the eye, as well as the mucous lining of the internal passages of the animal body, may and often do become diseased in such a manner, by neglect of purity and careful cleanliness, that they will give off contagious matter. The contagious disorders of the skin, the eyes and the mouth are results of neglect of cleanliness, and are justly esteemed very disgusting. Decaying matters, whether vegetable or animal, and not unfrequently the still living but unhealthy and unclean surfaces and tissues of both animal and vegetable bodies, are apt to become infected with parasites which prey upon and injure or destroy the tissues. Even the tenderest parts and juices of vegetable substances and the skin, the muscles and blood of the animal, may be harmed in this way. It was a little invisible parasite which destroyed the potatoes at harvest time throughout the country many years ago, and there are some foul waters and infected kinds of meat which will breed disease in persons who partake of them. Therefore, it is a duty to be cleanly in food and drink, as well as in our breathing and personal habits. It is doubtful if persons who become filthy in their habits and neglect to provide for the purification of their bodies, clothing and premises, will ever be found pure and sweet in their thoughts, language and influence.

An Important Discovery.

The most important Discovery is that which brings the most good to the greatest number. Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs, and Colds, will preserve the health and save life, and is a priceless boon to the afflicted. Not only does it possively cure Consumption, but Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Throat, Chest, and Lungs, yield at once to its wonderful curative powers. If you doubt this, get a Trial Bottle Free, at C. A. Wright & Co's Drug store.

Vasser girls ate 692 pounds of candy last year. Sweets to the sweet. But alas! they ate also forty bushels of onions.

The Secret of Wealth.

Broken down invalids do you wish to gain flesh, to acquire an appetite, to enjoy a regular habit of body, to obtain refreshing sleep, to feel and know that every fiber and tissue of your system is being braced up and renovated. If so commence at once a course of Golden Seal Bitters. In one week you will be convalescent. In a month you will be well. Don't despair because you have a weak constitution. Fortify the body against disease by purifying all the fluids with Golden Seal Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, are rendered disease proof by this great invigorant. Ruinous bills for medical attendance may be avoided by counteracting the first symptoms of sickness with these Bitters. They are recommended from friend to friend, and the sale increases daily. We warrant a cure. They are a positive cure also for all female complaints. In these diseases they have no equal. Take no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

Taken together, all the beauties of art and nature do not interest the inquisative female so much as the view she gets through the key hole.

C. A. Wright & Co. wish to make an assertion, which they can back with a positive guarantee. It is all about Acker's Blood Elixir. They claim for it superior merits over all other remedies of its kind, and guarantee for it a positive and sure cure for Rheumatism, Syphillis, and all blood disorders. It frees the skin from spots and disease, and leaves the complexion clear. Ask them about it.

In the literary as well as the military world, the most powerful abilities will often be found concealed under a rustic garb.

Avoid by all means the use of calomel for billious complaints. Ayer's Cathartic Pills compounded entirely of vegetable ingredients, have been tested for forty years, and are acknowledged to be the best remedy ever devised for torpidity of the liver, costiveness, and all derangements of the digestive apparatus.

ATKINS ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP SAVES CLOTHES.

Wash as you please, and it will make you its friend. Soak, boil and don't rub; or soak, rub and don't boil. We advocate dispensing, so far as possible with the washboard, because it wears the clothes out and wears you out. The soap contains no mineral to give it weight, and no pulp to give it size; therefore frequent boiling will not yellow or injure the clothes, but soaking and boiling with ELECTRIC LIGHT SOAP does clean and disinfect them. One thing is certain; it produces glorious results, is an economical soap and is so pure and harmless that the writer washes his head with it without injuring a hair, and he isn't bald either. Try it in the Laundry, Kitchen and Bath. Ask your grocer for it and take no other.

A change in the machinery of the Globe mill is being made by which the power from a second turbine wheel is transferred to the rollers, which will increase the capacity of the mill to 500 barrels per day. Additional rolls will be put in at once to utilize the additional power thus obtained. Heretofore the machinery has been run with one turbine and there was considerable surplus power wasted. This waste power will be utilized on the rollers. Mr. Hayden is always making improvements of some kind and this one will prove to be the best since the roller system was first put into the Globe mill.

Arthur Hubbard was arrested last Tuesday in Riga and taken to Adrian for insurance swindling, or obtaining money on fraudulent insurance policies. He claimed to be an agent for the Globe Reserve Company, of Baltimore. The company telegraphs to the prosecutor that Hubbard is a fraud, and has no authority. Hubbard insured a family of three persons, aggregating $11,000, for $75, taking a cow and horse in payment. He was once agent for the Globe Reserve, and was discharged, and did not surrender his commission. Hubbard formerly resided in Tecumseh and has relatives living here.

It was designed by Tom Adamson and manufactured in New York. Tom estimates its value at about $200. It is an elegant piece of jewelry and one which the captain will prize very highly.

Mrs. Freeman has the most fashionable millinery goods ever in town.

James Wallace has been assisting in the plastering of Allen's new hotel at Devil's Lake.

A. W. Slayton shipped 11 cars of lumber and hay last week. He reports trade lively. He is in Detroit this week.

In the absence of the pastor of the Baptist church, the Rev. Mr. Vincent will occupy the pulpit next Sunday morning. No evening service.

Mrs. H. L. Litchfield who has been spending the past three months with her brother, C. M. Burlingame, in this village, returned to her home in Salamanca, N. Y., last Tuesday.

The Alumni Reunion to be held at the Lilley House to-morrow evening promises to be more interesting than usual. The program will be presented as published in last week's HERALD.

Circus day threatened to be a failure in the morning. It rained most of the forenoon, but there was quite a crowd in town nevertheless. But about noon the clouds cleared away, and as the farmers could not work they came to the show in whole families. The attendance at the show, both afternoon and evening, was large. The show itself was a good one, better than the average. It has several superior ring performances, and their entire exhibition gave satisfaction.

J. A. Latcha, receiver of the Michigan & Ohio railroad, has just returned from New York, where he had a conference with the directors regarding an extension of the line so as to tap the pineries of Michigan and get a share of the lumber traffic. The scheme is not a new one, having been talked of when Mr. Latcha accepted the presidency of the Michigan & Ohio. The matter is now under consideration. The rumor that Mr. Latcha had resigned the receivership probably grew out of his visit to Gotham.

THE MASONS CAPTURE BLISSFIELD.

Last Monday evening, the Clinton Masonic team visited the Blissfield Lodge to assist the latter in third degree work. In response to an invitation, a large number of the brethren from Tecumseh, Adrian and Fairfield also availed themselves of the occasion to visit the Blissfield Lodge. Most of them went down on the afternoon Lake Shore train, and a few from Ridgeway and Fairfield drove overland. Tecumseh and Clinton furnished about twenty-five men each and the other places swelled the number to seventy-five. The Blissfield brethren hardly expected such a storm, but they proved themselves equal to the emergency and dispensed their hospitality in genuine Masonic style. The visiting members were more than pleased at the cordial manner in which they were received. An early supper was served at the Lodge room and at Col. Drew's hotel, and the session of the Lodge was opened promptly at 6:30 P. M., David Woodward, Master of the Clinton Lodge, acting as master of ceremonies. We are obliged to curb our reportorial inclination and draw the veil on what was done. Suffice it to say, the Masons who were present enjoyed the entertainment highly, and those who were absent can easily imagine what transpired.

Some little outside episodes lent spice to the occasion. While waiting for supper at the hotel, we encountered our friend Dr. Parker, who insisted upon our taking tea with him, an invitation which we gladly accepted. The Doctor's wife was formerly Miss Ida Cogswell, who lived in Tecumseh some years ago.

After the close of the session, upon going for our hat, we found the hat non est, but the accommodating gentleman who borrowed our hat had left another one, a size too large, in its place. The second hat had a big dent in the top, bore the marks of hard usage and was redolent with the odor of cabbage and potato bugs, but we folded it gently about our cranium and silently stole away. Upon arriving at the depot we found our genial friend Clint. Walters, of Bridgewater, prancing around with a strange hat on and earnestly searching for the owner. The hats were exchanged and we settled our damages by taking a year's subscription to the HERALD and agreeing to send the paper for three months.

As we were rolling homeward upon the train and ruminating upon the uncertainty of human events, these reflections presented themselves:

When a well-to-do farmer like Clint. Walters surreptitiously borrows an editor's tile, it is conclusive proof to our mind that something must be wrong with the cabbage patch.

When two such honorable and venerable citizens as Daniel D. Sinclair of Adrian, and Welcome V. Fisk, of Clinton, swap stove-pipe hats in the Lodge room and fail to detect the error until they get to the depot, it is strong evidence to our mind that something must be wrong with the goat.

When a handsome woman declines to allow a good looking man like Doctor Conklin to occupy a seat in the car with her little girl, it is conclusive evidence to our mind that something must be wrong with the pill-box.

A BEAUTIFUL RESORT

Allen's New Hotel at Devils Lake Nearly Completed—A Brief Description of the House.

We took a run up the M. & O. road the other day to Devils Lake, and while there we took occasion to interview Mr. J. B. Allen, the proprietor of the new "Devils Lake House" and take a stroll about the premises.

All was hurly-burly on that day, the new edifice being a bee hive, in which masons, carpenters and painters were vieing with each other in pushing along the work. The House is 34x76 feet in size with four full stories. It is placed on the side-hill, the two ends fronting to the North and South. The North front is about three rods from the railroad track and the south end rests on the flat, only a few feet distant from the lake.

The first or basement story contains kitchen and dining room, cellar and billiard room. The main floor contains the hotel office and general reception parlors. A large apartment in the Northwest corner will be occupied by Hope Welch for a store and confectionery room and the new postoffice will be located in this apartment. The second floor contains fifteen sleeping rooms, and the third floor is entirely devoted to a large dancing hall. This floor will accommodate twenty-four set of dancers without crowding.

The house is not a mere summer rookery, but is substantially built, with massive stone foundation, plastered partitions, a tin roof, with both outside and inside, elegantly painted and finished. A verandah extends around the entire building, and on the east front it is two stories. Window screens are provided for all the rooms. In addition to this house Mr. Allen owns a beautiful grove of twenty acres on the west shore of the lake, about half a mile south of the "Devils Lake House." This grove has been thoroughly cleared out, and a nice summer house erected thereon, for the special accommodation of picnic parties, camping parties, etc. Mr. Allen will also run his old hotel and dance pavilion on the South shore of the lake, thus controlling four separate establishments, each of which will accommodate a large number of guests. He now has on hand 70 sail boats and row boats, having built 26 new boats this spring. There are also three steamers now on the lake which will ply between the different landings each day and convey passengers from the M. & O. trains to the south shore. The new hotel will be formally opened to the public on the 3d of July, when Mr. Allen invites every body to come and enjoy themselves. A grand ball will be given on the night of the 3d., and the festivities will be kept up during the entire day of the 4th.

In this connection we deem it no more than fair to say a word in regard to the manner in which Mr. Henry Mensing, the contractor, has performed his part of the work. Mr. Mensing took the contract early in the spring to build the big hotel, a large barn, the summer house in the grove, and twenty-six new boats. He furnished all the material and employed his own labor. The entire contract will overrun $6000. He got the small jobs off his hands in April and the framing for the hotel. He took the foundation of the hotel the 1st. day of May, and the entire job of erection, plastering, roofing and painting will be completed inside of sixty days from that date. He has had an average force of fourteen hands at work on every day when the weather would permit. Including next Saturday there have been but twenty-three days in which the carpenters could work.

The Tecumseh Lumber Co. furnished the lumber; Whitnack, Bordine & Co., of Tecumseh, put on the tin roof, John Gardner, of Brooklyn, did the mason work, Geo. Chidester, of Tecumseh, did the painting. Mr. Allen is well satisfied with the expeditious and thorough manner in which the entire work has been done. The work is booming along with a rush this week, the plasterers are about through and the inside finishing will be completed on Saturday. The painters will put on the finishing touches early next week, and on Wednesday next Mr. Mensing will turn over the hotel all completed to the new proprietor, so that everything may be in readiness for the grand opening on the 3rd of July.

We have already spoken of the financial straits of the Kalamazoo College. Of the $68,000 to be raised before it could re-open this fall, $56,000 have been provided for on the condition that the whole amount be raised by July 30th. Accordingly $12,000 must yet be captured, and that too right away. In view of the pressing crisis, the Baptist church of this city unanimously voted last Sunday to allow their pastor, Rev. C. E. Conley, to leave his pulpit for the next few weeks, to enable him to assist in the work of raising funds. He will confine his operations to the Lenawee Association. The movement is general throughout the state, and it is hoped that the effort will succeed.

Miss Nellie Lawrence has been dangerously ill with quinsy the past week, but is now on the improve.

RAISIN VALLEY SEMINARY.

Thirteenth Annual Commencement, Held on Friday of Last Week.

Commencement Day at the Raisin Valley Seminary is looked forward to with much interest by a large number of the friends and patrons of that institution. The thirteenth annual Commencement anniversary was held on Friday last and was a most complete success in every particular. The weather was delightful, the program presented was a most entertaining one, the audience was large and appreciative. The main hall of the Seminary has lately been papered over with wall and ceiling decorations and presented a very tasty appearance. The wall in the rear of the rostrum was appropriately trimmed with evergreen and floral emblems, the latter representing a shield, a bell and a vase of flowers. The class motto, "Quæ mereat palmam ferat" was placed in large silver letters on an evergreen background, both fixed on a semi-circular hanger suspended from the ceiling on a line with the front of the stage. When ten o'clock arrived, the hour appointed for the commencement of the exercises, the large hall was filled to overflowing, even standing room being at a discount, and the adjoining rooms and hallways were crowded with listeners.

Shortly after ten o'clock Prof. W. W. White called the audience to order and announced the program in the following order:

Music—A piano duet, by Misses Kirk and Bray, of Adrian.

Then followed scripture reading and prayer.

A vocal duet by Mrs. W. B. Mumford and Miss Kells, of Adrian, with Miss Eva Kirk as pianist. The duet was entitled "I know a bank," and was finely rendered.

Four addresses followed: The Great Premier, by Linton A. Cox, of Azalia, Ind. Solomon's Royal Visitor, by Miss Deckie Eddy, of Adrian. Now and Then, by Albert H. Lloyd, of Bull Creek, West Va. Silent Cities, by Miss Chattie Gallaway, Raisin Center.

Mrs. Mumford then sang a solo entitled, "Sing, sweet bird."

Then came four more addresses.

General Gordon, by Walter J. Hussey, Mt. Pleasant, O.

Night brings out the stars, by Miss Carrie E. Satterthwaite, Tecumseh.

Newspapers, by Frank A. Ryon, of Hanover.

This one thing I do, by Miss Susie E. Brown, of Adrian.

Piano duet, by Misses Kirk and Bray.

Prof. White then presented the diplomas to the eight graduates in a few appropriate remarks, after which Maggie E. Newsom delivered a most interesting address.

We should be pleased to give this address to our readers entire, but want of space prevents our doing so.

The exercises closed with a quartette by Messrs. W. Ferguson, W. H. Howard, F. M. Aunks and G. R. Swift, with Miss Kirk at the piano. It was well rendered and was a fitting termination to an admirable program.

The bouquet maker had not been idle. Each graduate was a recipient of many floral offerings, as well as books, albums and other articles. At the conclusion of his presentation remarks, Prof. White was presented with an elegant gold headed cane and Miss Newsom, at the close of her address, received some beautiful vases.

Taken all in all, it was the most complete commencement program ever presented at the Seminary.—There were four young ladies and four young gentlemen among the graduates. Their addresses all bore the marks of careful study, both in the subject matter and in the manner of delivery. The music was all that the most exacting musical critic could ask for, and all the little details were systematically arranged and smoothly carried out. The elegant presents given to Prof. White and Miss Newsom, added not a little to the interest of the occasion.

In this connection it may be well to state that the Seminary was never in a more flourishing condition. The attendance last year was larger than usual and all indications point to a still larger attendance next year.

The following instructors have been engaged for the coming year, all of whom are admirably adapted for their positions:

Prof. W. W. White, B. S.—Principal.

Mary Etta Parker—Assistant Principal.

F. R. Hathaway, B. S.—Associate Teacher.

John U. Harkness—Superintendent.
Charity C. Harkness—Matron.

Hope Welch, the man who will run the store at Allen's new hotel at Devils lake, was in town last Tuesday on business.

The Lake Shore road will sell half fare tickets commencing the 3d of July, and good returning the 6th, to all points on the road.

A fine time was had at the rink last evening, the occasion being a skating party to Miss Lillie Bidwell. A large crowd was present.

J. D. Hayward brought into our office yesterday, a quart of strawberries. There were just thirty berries, by actual count, in the measure, and the basket was well filled.

J. H. Underwood has assumed the official robes of office and taken possession of the postoffice at Addison. He takes to his new duties like a veteran. The location question has not been settled yet, but he expects to locate the office where the people want it.

Supervisor Bresie has lost a valuable meerschaum pipe, present from an esteemed friend at Boston. He took his usual morning smoke and laid the pipe on the window at his residence, but it was not there at supper time. It is an all fired good one 'tis for a fact. So is the one who finds it.

Mrs. C. D. King, missionary to the Naga Hills, Assam, is spending a few days in town, visiting old friends, as Tecumseh was once her home. It is expected that she will speak at the Baptist church a week from next Sunday evening. Undoubtedly she will be greeted by a large audience.

The rink will be open on Saturday evening of this week instead of on Friday as announced last week. As Knapp's band was desired for the Alumni reunion at the Lilley House to-morrow evening, Mr. Cash has kindly consented to postpone the opening of his rink until Saturday evening.

Mr. Ansel P. Coddington has a war relic in his possession, which is a guardian's bond given in April 1728 in Prince George Co., Virginia. He picked it up at Prince George Court House, when his regiment was doing duty at that point during the war. Mr. Coddington keeps the original safely, but we prevailed upon him to loan it to us long enough to inspect it. It is one of his most highly prized mementoes of the war.

AYER'S PILLS.
A large proportion of the diseases which cause human suffering result from derangement of the stomach, bowels, and liver. AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS act directly upon these organs, and are especially designed to cure the diseases caused by their derangement, including Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Headache, Dysentery, and a host of other affections, for all of which they are a safe, sure, prompt and [illegible] remedy. The great success attained by these Pills, by reason of their [illegible], has induced unprincipled persons to offer other pills of inferior quality and value, on the strength of our reputation. We caution the public against such impositions, and advise those who desire the best of any pill whatever made, to invariably demand AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS, and to take no other.

The Life is the Blood—Prevent Disease—Surgery the Last Resort—A Telling Letter.
Here is a fact for you to think over. [illegible] Medical science proves that diseases, however [illegible] rarely they seem to have resulted from comparatively few causes. It is for this reason that some single medicine [illegible] a large [illegible] complaints—some of them appearing [illegible] to have no relation to the disease. When a medicine of preparation acts at once upon the digestive and urinary organs, and also purifies the blood, the list of diseases it may cure is astonishing. But while many things are said to possess this power, those which actually do exert it are very rare.
It is conceded that Dr. Kennedy's Famous Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y., is the most [illegible] preparation now in use for all diseases arising from a foul or impure state of the constitution. Hence it is more than likely that if the writer of the following letter had habitually taken "Favorite Remedy" ten years ago, he would never have suffered from cancer.
PITTSFIELD, Mass., March 22, 1881.
Dr. David Kennedy,
Dear Sir—About six years ago I was obliged to resort to external treatment for the removal of a cancerous growth on my lip. On my return home I became sensible that my blood needed a thorough cleansing. My whole system too required tonicing. While casting about for the best medicine to do this, your "FAVORITE REMEDY" was so highly recommended in my hearing that I resolved to try it. I did so, and the result surprised me. It was effected so quickly and completely. I soon got over the depression produced by the operation, and since then "Favorite Remedy," which I have continued to take in small doses, has kept me in such good health and strength as I never had before, nor expected to have. It is the best blood purifier in the world. I am sure of that from experience.

THE CONTRIBUTION BOX.

It Makes a Confession and Gives a Few Pretentious People Away.

"My friends," said the contribution box in a hollow voice, "my time is well-nigh spent, and I shan't be with you many days. I have lived a correct life and have always taken care of myself and though, to be sure, I have been around a good deal, I never got full. But the lining of my stomach is all worn out, my posts are out of kilter, and I feel sometimes as though actually falling to pieces. However, I might have kept up and above awhile longer, but, just as I was in the prime of life, I received a blow from which I never recovered. That morning, the sexton—I was all bruised up, you know—escaped a crack on the ear, and I felt the contribution box, with a ghastly attempt at facetiousness, that the shock was too much for me. My arm was broken short off, and when the sexton, instead of apologizing, kicked me a cross-grained old thing, my heart was broken too, I really believe.

"Well, well," continued the contribution box, after a pause, "I've seen a good deal in my time, and it may not be altogether unprofitable for you to hear some of my experiences. I have been a close observer all my life, and I think I know something about human nature. It has always been amusing to me, when I passed beneath the noses of the people in the pews, to watch the varied expressions on the faces above me. There was Mrs. Grandison, for example. She was the widest awake woman you ever saw on a church or a caucus. Well, I came around she was [illegible] or pretended to be asleep. I don't give her a good [illegible] I never amounted to anything. She hated so much as give a [illegible] as a mere [illegible] shot as the sexton approached. I did [illegible] by pushing my [illegible] pew, after having [illegible] Her eyes were wide open [illegible] as soon as the sexton passed. She looked [illegible] the thing with a heavenly [illegible] through and through [illegible] I resented as long as I [illegible] it was to do. Her eyes [illegible] the pews and I had to give [illegible]

"Then there was old Mr. Rich [illegible] I almost made the split [illegible] the ostentatious way in which he would drop a [illegible] into my pocket. I knew of [illegible] in which he contributed [illegible] supposed, from the air of conscious rectitude with which he [illegible] that he had given five dollars, at least. How different his manner was from that of Widow Goode, who [illegible] and fear. She never [illegible] I knew she couldn't afford it, and it almost made me feel like a thief to take it from her. She used to slip the money into my pocket, as though she were doing something wrong, and were ashamed to let anybody know it.

"The young ladies would hold out a dime in their delicate gloved fingers with a languorous air, and then just as lazily as not giggle right in my face, though I never could understand what they saw to laugh at. The children would throw their great noisy pennies into my pocket with a jolly eagerness that was quite refreshing. But I must own that I went away from their pews oftentimes with a very heavy heart, and feeling quite cheap, notwithstanding their plentiful donations; and there was one family of boys—the little rascals!—who used to put lozenges into my pocket. I afterward found out that their mother gave them ten cents apiece, and they used to buy candy with it and feed me with sweetmeats. But perhaps the young scamps were not really so bad, after all. Possibly they thought the little heathen children might like a little candy now and then as well as themselves.

"I have noticed that people like to sit behind the man who gave a dollar bill. They all of them always gave something—and I have been so uncharitable as to think that they wanted to have it seem to the pews back of them that it was they who contributed the dollar, and not the little bald-headed man in the front seat. I suppose one reason why I got this idea into my head was because when the first pew gave only a small piece of money, I wouldn't receive another cent in the whole aisle, as though, so I fancied, everybody was afraid to give himself away, as they say nowadays.

"I used to smile when the deacon who carried me around would stand up before the whole congregation and throw a handful of coin into my pocket. Everybody got the impression that the good deacon was a very benevolent gentleman, and I more than half believe that he thought so himself. His face looked like a horn of plenty, and he gave the money in such an absentminded manner that, though nobody could fail to see the operation, everybody must have thought that he was quite oblivious to anybody's presence. But between you and me, the deacon never put in any money—not a cent, I assure you. When he went to church he always had a lot of tin disks. Of course, they were always discovered when the money was counted, but everybody laid it to the boys up in the gallery. However, the deacon's contribution did a power of good, not so much for its intrinsic worth as from the beautiful example it afforded to others. If the deacon could be so liberal, others felt as though they could give generously also. There's nothing so potent in this world, after all, as a good example.

"I couldn't begin to tell you all the queer things I've seen," continued the contribution box. "Some folks who I knew hadn't paid their butcher for six months would give liberally, and others who were worth no end of money would hold out a ten-cent piece and let go of it with great reluctance and with a sigh and a shudder that were quite saddening. But the meanest man I ever knew was a well-dressed chap whom I detected more than once putting in a dime and taking out a quarter. I never passed him unnoticed, and he was generally considered one of the main supports of the church, but I could have told a quite different story."

The contribution box stopped speaking. Possible, however, it might have resumed and told many more strange things, but just at this moment the sexton came along, and remarking "I guess you are good for nothing now but firewood," crushed the contribution box beneath his heavy heel and tossed it into a pile of wood. A moment later and poor old contribution box was but a handful of ashes at the bottom of the furnace.—Boston Transcript.

THE EARTHQUAKE ERA.

Vital Throes Which Result in Disturbing the Earth's Crust.

The era we are passing through will be distinguished in the future for its great throes that have been disturbing portions of the earth's surface, and in some cases altering the very shape of lines. These throes of the earth have been called vital, as they are a display of energy on the part of our planet itself. In one region it takes the form of volcanic eruption, in another, of earthquakes. It is now tolerably well settled that these perturbations of the earth's crust are due to the shrinkage caused by the planet losing a portion of its internal heat. As every schoolboy knows, heat expands every material object upon which it acts, from water which is turned into steam to iron which enlarges very sensibly at white heat. For countless ages, our planet has been parting with its heat. In doing so, the crust of the earth shrinks and mountains are uplifted, shore lines altered, and lakes and oceans become deepened. The convulsive shrinkages produce heat in the localities most affected, that explodes in the form of volcanoes, or produces earthquakes. Where such vents are not known. It is worth noting that in Spain several thousand persons were killed recently by the earthquakes. Indeed, the destruction of life from time to time in the Spanish Peninsula from earthquakes has been very great. In 1755 Lisbon was destroyed, when 50,000 persons were swallowed up by the earth. The destruction of life has never been so great in the Italian Peninsula, because Vesuvius and Etna furnished vents for the subterranean heat. There are no volcanoes in Spain. The series of eruptions that have attracted the attention of mankind lately began with the great earthquake at Krakatoa. This was in the far Pacific. The day afterward, a series of mountainous waves washed the shores of California, showing that the volcanic action affected the greater part of the bed of the Pacific Ocean. Since then we have had numerous earthquakes in different parts of the globe, including the northeastern part of the United States. Scientists, however, agree that California will always be more liable than any other State in the Union to these disturbances.—Demorest's Monthly.

THE MUSK-RAT OF INDIA.

An Interesting Animal That Bears a Charmed Life.

The musk-rat is from six to eight inches long, of a slatish blue color, with a long, movable snout and diminutive eyes. Its skin is very loose, and quite conceals the extremities, only allowing the feet to be seen. This formation occasions the peculiar pattering of its run. The tail, broad at its base, is pinkish and bare of everything except a few hairs; ears are diminutive. Loathed and detested by all, this creature leads a charmed life; only a few dogs will kill it, and then there is always sneezing and a little foaming afterward. Cats follow, but won't touch it; it is, moreover, equally avoided by more aristocratic rats and mice. As the animal runs along the wall of the room it admits a kind of self-satisfied purr, which, if alarmed, breaks into a squeak, and immediately the scent bottle is opened. If there is light to see the tiny creature, you will observe it scanning with its nose all parts of the horizon in search of what caused the alarm, the eyes apparently being unequal to the task. Musk-rats have a singular habit of always running along the walls of a room, never crossing from one wall to the other; hence, as they are not swift movers, they are easily overtaken, and a blow from a cane instantly kills the animal. Traps are of little use in capturing these creatures, and if one is captured that trap is forever useless as regards ordinary rats and mice, which won't approach it after being contaminated. "Muskies" are omnivorous and very voracious. During the rains the insect world is on the wing. If at this season you place a night-light on the ground near the beat of a musk-rat you will be amused at watching its antics in trying to catch some of the buzzers around the light, or those crawling up the wall, and will be surprised at its agility. The captives are ruthlessly crunched, and the animal never seems satiated; at the same time its enjoyment is evinced by its purring. Woe betide him should another musky invade this happy hunting ground. War is at once proclaimed, and immediately the two are fighting for their lives, squeaking, snapping, biting, rolling over and over, and all the time letting off their awful scent bottles. You, in a comparative distance, just escape the disgusting odor; but the incest invaders catch it full, and quickly leave the scene. And so the fight goes on, until you happily catch both the combatants with one blow of your cane, and the stinking turmoil ceases; and having thrown open the doors to ventilate the room, you are glad to retire to rest. Another anomaly pertains to this animal, though so disgusting to others, it is not so to itself, and it is one of the tidiest and most cleanly of animals.—Chambers' Journal.

—A Calhoun County man, during a recent visit to a prohibition town, ran upon what is known as a "blind tiger." The "blind tiger" is a house where the people can get whisky but do not know from whom they buy it. There is a hole in the side of the house with printed instructions above it. You place your bottle and money in the hole and both disappear, but in a few minutes your bottle returns full of whisky. No word is spoken and not a sound is heard except the rolling of the bottle.—Calhoun (Ga.) Times.

PERSONAL AND IMPERSONAL.

—Sarah Bernhardt gets three hundred dollars a day for acting. Of this her creditors take one hundred and eighty, leaving her one hundred and twenty dollars. Her table costs her twenty dollars a day, and fuel and lights about five dollars more. Her carriage hire—she has sold her own equipage—comes to eight dollars a day, and cosmetics, including rouge, five dollars more.

—Romantic lovers of late seem to prefer that some peculiarity—a marriage remembrance, as it were—shall attach to the important moment when lives and fortunes become united for better or worse. At San Saba, Texas, the other day, a couple were married on the street, sitting in a buggy, the bridegroom armed with a rifle and the bride with a revolver. They feared the bride's relatives.

—Italian papers are bewailing the extent and intensity of the emigrant fever among the peasantry. They say that the ship loads of emigrants who are taken from Italy to America are draining Italy of its most productive factors. The tide of emigration, they say, is assuming proportions which is calamitous to the state, and they instance the fact that one Prefect alone issued last year six thousand passports for emigrants to America.

—For the last five years a Chicago photographer has been collecting photographs of prominent persons connected with that city, with the object of having them sealed up in a memorial safe, deeded over to the city, and deposited in the court-house vaults with the archives of the city until the second centennial, of 1976. He has already prepared five thousand, seven hundred and forty-six of these photographs, and expects to collect ten thousand altogether.—Chicago Herald.

—Dr. Goersen, the Philadelphia murderer, hanged recently, had an ingenious arrangement to enable him to read at night. As there was neither a gas-jet nor a lamp allowed in his cell, he was obliged to devise some means to enable him to pass away the time in reading. He obtained a sheet of tin, and, after brightening it, placed it outside his window at such an angle as to catch the rays of light from a gas lamp in the kitchen yard, sixty feet away from his cell. These rays were then concentrated inside of his cell by means of a magnifying glass, and by placing his book or paper near the glass he obtained enough light to read by.—Philadelphia Press.

—The daughter of a New York millionaire has applied for a divorce on the ground that her husband basely deceived her. He assured her that he was a coachman, but, since marrying him she has discovered that he is only an editor. We didn't suppose there was such a brand of heartless villainy abroad in the land.—Norristown Herald.

—Just as a lover had dropped on his knees and began popping the question a pet poodle, who thought the proceedings rather strange, made a dash for him. With remarkable nerve for a woman, the girl reached over, seized the dog by the neck, and at the same time calmly uttered: "Go on, George, dear. I'm listening to what you are saying."—Chicago Tribune.

—Jones—"I hear that the handsome young tenor of your choir is to marry the charming soprano. Sing-ular, is it not?" Smith—"Yes; each struck a chord in the other's heart, it did not take long to register their vows, and it will be a note-able wedding. They will spend their honeymoon on the high C's." "Very romantic affair, no doubt." "Well, no, except that they met by chants.—Philadelphia Call.

—Conversation at a ball: She—"Why, how glad I am to see you to-night, Mr. S. Just think, it's fifteen years since I saw you last." He—"Quite remarkable, I declare." She—"Oh, you abominable thing!"—St. Louis Spectator.

—In the Tower of London are twenty-one specimens of shields, with a pistol attachment in the center, the weapon being a breech-loader, and slightly projecting, so that it would hardly be noticed by an enemy until it was discharged. All these shields were carried in former times as "concealed weapons."

—Two Frenchmen, the brothers Forre, have invented a new kind of harp, made entirely of wood. Instead of strings, the inventors use strips of American fir. The sound is produced, as in the ordinary harp, by the contact of the fingers, but the player wears leather gloves covered with rosin. The tone of the instrument is said to be one of remarkable purity.

—The enormous wealth of the Orleans Princes is chiefly derived from Louis Philippe's mother, who, in consequence of the death of her brother, the Prince de Lamballe, became sole heiress of her father, the Duke of Penthievre, the richest subject of France. The Duke died in 1793. His daughter had two days before his death been divorced from her worthless husband, who was thus debarred from touching her property.

—Kossuth, while still alive, enjoys the satisfaction of knowing what the world's opinion of him will be after death. He has, it is asserted, cut out all the obituary notices that have reached him, and they fill half a dozen scrap-books, hundreds of newspapers having been sent him from different countries as soon as it was known that the report of his death was untrue.

—Twenty-five Germans who have entered the Chinese service were required to take Chinese names. One of them, who was formerly captain of a corvette, is now called Wang-Li-Triang, which, when turned into English, means Mr. High Wall. He has just been promoted to the rank of Admiral, and commands the Chao Yung. Another German officer is now named Lin-Pao, or Mr. Six Cannons.

—Shop signs in London were formerly not affixed to houses, but were placed on posts or hung thereon with hinges. So largely did these increase at one time that they absolutely obstructed the free circulation of air, and were supposed to be among the causes of the frequent epidemical disorders of London. They also naturally aided the spread of conflagrations, and on these grounds were afterward forbidden to be displayed

THE GLACIERS OF ALASKA.

Forty Miles Across the Mountains by the Ice.

When the Davidson glacier takes its last turn in its course and pushes out through a grand gateway in the mountains, it spreads out in fan shape and sweeps down in a long graceful slope to its terminal moraine. The moraine has been built up from the water by the deposit of rocks, pebbles and sand, ground up and carried down from the mountains by the glacier, until a long strip of dry land formed in front of the melting ice. The moraine before the Davidson glacier was made so long ago that a dense forest of ancient and lofty pines has stretched like a hedge across the three miles of the glacier's front.

Forty miles across the mountains by the ice, or around four or five times that distance by water to the other side of the mountainous peninsula is the famous Glacier Bay, the great natural show place of Alaska. Seven immense glaciers flow into the waters of the bay, coming down twenty, forty and even sixty miles from great snow fields in the White Mountain and Fairweather Alps Range. One of the largest of these ice rivers is named the Muir Glacier, in honor of Professor John Muir, of California, who was the first white man to tell the world of its existence no further back than 1879. He went cautiously up an inlet of the bay in an Indian canoe; but large ocean steamers ride up within a quarter of a mile of the ice front now each summer, and are received with thunders and cannonades from the ice spirits at every visit.

Sailing up that long inlet filled with bergs and floating ice, one sees a broad gray river of ice pouring down a great valley between two mountain ranges, with tributary streams of ice joining it from every gap and defile, and from around every jutting point.

The frozen flood, with its tossed and broken waves, stretches ten miles across from mountain wall to mountain wall, and the long tongue of ice running down to the inlet presents a water washed, crystaline cliff three miles long, and from two to four hundred feet in height. Slowly creeping down the valley, and thrusting itself into the water, the ice is honey combed by the washing of tides and huge pieces of the front, and avalanches of ice are sliding down into the water with a continuous crash and roar at low tide. The spray and waves dash far up the glittering front after one of these great ice slides, and there is a magnificent play of prismatic colors on the fretted and fantastic ice wall when the sunlight falls full on the western front.

The largest glaciers of Switzerland could be put away in a corner of the Muir Glacier and lost; and except on the coast of Greenland it is claimed that there is nothing that surpasses this and other water fronting glaciers of Southern Alaska. A great river boils up from under the middle of the glacier where a long cape or point of ice runs out into the water, and on either side of the glacier streams emerge from the sides of the ice and course over the long sides or lateral moraines to the inlet. The river on the north side is the larger, and by a long climb over stones and bowlders and along crumbling banks the dark grotto in the glacier is reached from which the muddy river rushes to the sunlight after its long course in the heart of the glacier.

Climbing the icy hillside, the vast sea of billowy, broken ice lies before one, ice piled, tossed and ground into wild and fantastic array, narrow crevices and vast gulfs opening at one's feet and giving glimpses far down into a wonderland filled with pale blue and indigo shadows. With the nightless days of summer the surface ice melts rapidly and in the sunshine every inch is sparkling and glistening with the trickling drops.—Exchange.

ALBERT EDWARD.

The Prince of Wales as an Extemporaneous Speech-Maker.

There are very few men in England who can make as good a speech as the Prince of Wales. His voice is singularly far-reaching, clear, pleasant, and his delivery is simple and dignified. But it must not be supposed that the ease and fluency which now characterize his public discourses were attained without trouble, or that the Prince is one of the "mob of gentlemen who 'speak' at ease," and have very little to say worth listening to. At first, when he had to address an audience—and it fell to his lot to begin speech-making whilst he was very young indeed—he spoke with some hesitation, and he gave his audience the idea of one who would be very glad when he could sit down; but by persistent practice, stimulated by the certainty that he must look forward to constant calls upon him, and animated by a high sense of duty, the Prince overcame the difficulties which beset most young orators, aggravated in his case by the consciousness that every word he uttered would be eagerly weighed and recorded. He has acquired a command of language and a felicity of expression which commend his matter to the most critical, whilst it is at the same time judicious in substance and much to the point. No one can make a better case for a charitable institution than the Prince, and his appeals to the pockets of his hearers when he is presiding at dinner to promote the work of some beneficient association, or to further some useful and meritorious enterprise, are so successful that it is considered the fortune of an evening, from a financial point of view, is secured when the Prince of Wales has consented to take the chair. On occasions of national importance and interest such as the opening of public institutions, the Prince's speeches, carefully prepared, and excellently pronounced, are models of what such work should be, setting forth the objects in view, the history of the movement, and the claims it has to support or approval, in well-chosen and effective words. The Prince has had practice enough certainly, for since his marriage he has been associated with every movement in the kingdom, and has been called upon to open exhibitions, bridges, and buildings, parks and museums, "inaugurate" statues, lay foundation-stones, preside at commissions and banquets year after year, and has answered to the call with unflagging spirit, cheerfulness, and effect.—William Howard Russell, in Harper's Magazine.

HOIHOW.

A Chinese City With Novel Smells Rivaling the Far-Famed Smells of Cologne.

Hoihow is not an attractive town. The streets of the suburb outside the wall are even narrower than those of ordinary small towns in China, much dirtier, and the visitor, who has already some knowledge of China, detects a few varieties of bad smell that impress him with the idea of absolute novelty. The inhabitants show the mixed types of Fokien and Kwang-tung, with such indigenous elements as have, during many thousands of years, been finding their way here from the mainland of the peninsula of Father India, or the islands that lie to the southward of it. They are well-disposed and far less curious than the Chinese of mainland cities. The shops contain such Chinese goods as are suited to a population of this class, with odds and ends of European and American notions which have within thirty years found their way to the most retired villages in the interior of Asia. The markets make a liberal display of fish and pork, which is considered the diet in China, and, what can not be seen elsewhere, a kind of water-snake (for sale at the fish-stalls), which is esteemed a delicacy by the Hainanese. The dress is with some variations, that of the Kwang-tung provinces. The language heard in the streets is so different from that of the mainland as to be hardly intelligible to a native of Canton. The houses are of lava-stone, or brick, one story in height, and though swarming with pigs, dogs, and vermin, are permament and comfortable in a climate that is always cool and sometimes cold in winter. The residences of the merchants and officials are spacious. The guilds have large halls, or detached buildings, conspicuous by their Chinese ornaments in front, their two lofty poles bearing huge baskets, and a stage where theatrical representations are occasionally given. The wall of the old town is not crenelated. The streets within it are broader and cleaner and the shops larger and better stocked. The foreigners connected with the customs and consulates are comfortably domesticated in Chinese houses, no European residences having been built during the eight years since Hoihow became an open port.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

A Clear Head and a Strong Heart.

If you muddle your brains with any of the whiskey compounds which are sold under the name of "bitters," and which topers delight in for stimulant—you do your system irreproachable mischief. Brown's Iron Bitters is not one of these. It promotes healthy action of the heart, liver and stomach. It cleanses and enriches the blood, and fits the brain for the best mental work. The best physicians prescribe it, and it is well worthy of a trial by all.

LINCOLN AS A LAWYER.

In What His Peculiar Strength at the Bar Consisted.

As a lawyer Mr. Lincoln never attained the eminence and reputation of Evarts, Black, Seward, Carpenter or Wilson. He never had their kind of practice nor the fifty thousand dollars a year, of a great city press to report his speeches in the million. His largest fee was $5,000 in a railroad case.

As a jury lawyer, perhaps, he excelled, his peculiar strength lay in the presenting of facts clearly that the law applied. Then, then, strong with a mighty grasp of homely illustration, he swept away all sophistry, and, in language of resistless power, spoke home to him, by his quaint and telling illustration, that early battle with nature of the farmer's boy in Pike county, that gave him a marvelous memory of what he learned.

A large, rugged frame, that to others was a burden, was to him an element of greatness. As a trial lawyer his grasp of the merits was paramount. If the right theory to win was plain, he was a powerful advocate before a jury. His manner, his quaint humor, enforced attention. If cases were piling up his book so crowded, his words so apt, while speaking, that even an hostile jury became interested, and, by the time, during the early Kansas troubles, said "Abraham Lincoln was large of enemies, fifteen minutes after they were cheering him like friends." He had a clear reason in all that he said and clothed it by an accident that carried conviction straight to the hearts of his hearers. His keen, pointed, crisp stories were only designed to bring home his word, pointing it, fender and true into the heart and intellect, where, if he was somewhere, he held his audience by a power as great as that which his purpose, when not pointing, to be eloquent.

His modest office in Springfield was in the second story of a plain red-brick block, the door to reach it being open, large and inviting. Opposite with a window looking north and south was a table, a few chairs and a lounge, nothing in all, warrantable. Such furnishings as typewriters, increase typewriters and book-racks were then unknown in Springfield. A few old or old-fashioned, his plain hand-writing and very many law-books, and the walls in cases, but neither rich carpets nor fine ceilings adorned the firm's office. The windows were of shop glass and not attractive. The days of good law offices and not arrived and the solid comfort of the average lawyer were all unknown to Mr. Lincoln. Save as he found them with his favorite counsel, Leonard Swett, in Chicago.

Strong and rugged in nature, he inherited from both a fund of humor and a vein of sadness that never left him. In his struggle with the world in youth, and with war in manhood called to high stations before he was fully known to the people, it is doubtful if he ever fully knew just the fame he had won as an advocate or the genius he possessed as a man. He was born of his time, a creature of the age of giants, a genius from the people, of the greatest for its struggles for the people, did more than any one of his race to destroy caste and give courage to the lowly, and therein he wrote the brightest pages of human progress.

With Lincoln to be noted labor became honorable, and men no longer denied their humble beginnings.

Lincoln, the lowly, the exalted, the pure marble made marble, the plain cover to a gentle nature, the giant frame and noble intellect. The shaft that marks his silent resting place, the books he read, the office he used, the strong body that covered his warm heart and wise purposes were only the outer symbols to the higher gifts of his Creator. All gifts and graces are never found in one person. He is great if the good predominate. All are not born equal. Gifts are diversified, but if ever a man had the genius of greatness it was Lincoln. As all are eloquent in that which they know, he was eloquent in the affairs of life.—J. W. Donovan, in Current.

A Great General.

Major John A. Rudd, formerly of the Confederate army of the southwest, and who met Grant and his men on the gory field of battle several times, said to the Hatchet yesterday:

"Grant was a great General. He has never been given full credit for his ability nor the full measure of his goodness of heart. General Grant is loved by the Southern soldiers, to whom he has always been a true friend. Should he die they will be found among the most sorrowful of the mourners at his bier. But I hope he may yet survive the treatment of his scientific attendants. Some people in the South complained of certain objectionable things that General Grant did. To these he said: 'I am simply enforcing the laws as I found them on the statute-book. The best way to get rid of a bad law is to enforce it strictly.'"

Major Rudd related the following anecdote of the great Captain:

"I called on him several years ago in behalf of a certain ex-Union officer who was incarcerated in the Missouri State prison, unjustly in my opinion. I made a plain statement of the case to him and concluded with the remark that, as a Confederate soldier who had been shot all to pieces, I asked that the facts in the case be given the attention they deserved. General Grant replied: 'The matter shall be attended to.' On the following day the Union veteran was released. Grant saw the injustice of his incarceration at once, and acted promptly, and in the same manner that he struck his telling blows during the war."—Washington Hatchet.

—A young man in Abbeville, S. C., suffering from pneumonia, called in a physician, who left him a small vial of veratrum, to be taken internally, and a liniment composed of hartshorn, turpentine and chloroform for external application. The patient reversed the directions, swallowing the liniment, and the next day was well.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Field of Tecumseh, spent Sunday at Joseph Kies.

Miss Lida Wilkerson of Dundee, is visiting her uncle's, Peter Kishpaugh.

Mrs. George Fisher has been very sick for several days and at last accounts was no better.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Silvers of Pittsford, have been visiting Clinton friends. They returned to their home last Sunday.

Noah Burroughs of Tecumseh was in town last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bostedore of Eaton Rapids are visiting in and around Clinton.

Mr. and Mrs. Watt Aten were guests at James Hause's last Wednesday and Thursday.

The little son of P. C. Smith met with quite a serious accident last Thursday. He was standing by a window which was raised, his hand resting on the sill, when some slight jar caused the sash, which was not fastened securely, to fall, nearly crushing the little fellow's hand. Dr. John Tuttle dressed it, and thought no bones were broken. The baby is now doing well.

The quiet and repose which is supposed to and does usually fall upon our little village after the hour of midnight, was considerably disturbed last Saturday night or (Sunday morning) by the unseemly actions of some boys who were "half seas" and one man who was "clear" over. The boys are fast approaching manhood, but have not yet reached that age when the saloon-keeper is justified in selling them liquor. The law has been broken. Where are the citizens who are so anxious to help make the law? Why are they so reluctant to help enforce it? None can blame his neighbor when he himself will do nothing. What a brilliant start these boys are making in life! We look forward a few years, and predict for them unheard of success in anything they may choose to undertake. Such an ambitious beginning cannot fail to be followed by success.

It is reported that John Hause has bought the house and lot owned by the late Mrs. Starr.

The first annual reunion of the Clinton High School Graduates was held last Friday evening at the Town Hall. All the members of the Alumni were present except three. The program consisted of music, vocal and instrumental, an address by Prof. Laflin, history of the Alumni, by Miss Laura Haggart, which contained many pleasing allusions to days gone by, and a poem by Mrs. Charles Clark, which kept the audience in a state of merriment throughout the recitation. After the entertainment the Alumni went to the Lancaster house where a bountiful repast awaited them. The supper was all that could be desired and the guests were well served. After supper toasts and responses were given, followed by the election of officers for the ensuing year. Each member seemed to feel that, though there were many ways in which the reunion might have been improved, yet as it was the first attempt that had been made in this direction, they were inclined to call it a success, trusting to next year for the improvements. The following officers were elected for 1886.

President—O. A. Sinclair.
Vice " —MrsW. D. VanTuyle.
Secretary—Eli G. McConnell.
Treasurer—Miss Kate C. Mead.
Orator—S. O. VanDeMark.
Historian—Mrs. C. S. Burroughs.
Poet—Dwight Hause.
Toast Master—Chas. F. Clark.

Commencement exercises were held Thursday evening, June 25th, at the Town Hall. The class consisted of four graduates, Ansel Kishpaugh, Dwight Hause, Eli G. McConnell and Miss Maggie Biggins, all of whom took the English course. The stage was tastily decorated with evergreens and flags. The colors of our Union being festooned above and around the stage, and flowers in abundance, by far the most beautiful decoration of all. The class motto: "We live to Conquer," in white letters against a dark background, was suspended above the front of the stage. The program was opened with a prayer by Rev. Joseph St. John, followed by an instrumental duet by Mrs. Susie Fisk and Miss Blanche Smith. The first essay of the evening was read by Miss Minnie Hess, subject—Action. Ansel Kishpaugh then delivered an oration on Practical Education, setting forth his ideas on the subject with a directness that plainly showed them to be the result of his own imagination. Next on the program was a vocal solo by M. Russell, The Anc Lor's Weigh. Then came a recitation entitled a Child's Dream of a Star, by Grace Rowland, and an Essay on Boxes by Esther Matthews, both of which merited and received a hearty round of applause. The Wood Nymph's Call was sung by Miss Blanche Smith. Her voice, which shows a great deal of culture, seemed particularly fitted to the selection and everyone thoroughly enjoyed her singing. An essay, The Present Age, was read by Miss Minnie Martin, a member of the junior class. Eli G. McConnell delivered an oration on Utility of Mathematics. The production was a very creditable one and showed considerable study. Mrs. J. T. Clark sung a solo, Let me Dream Again. The subject of Miss Maggie Biggins' essay was: The Stars. It was very finely read and its construction of sentences and grouping of ideas, gave evidence of work on the part of the speaker. Dwight Hause, the subject of whose essay was, Sawing, held the place of honor on the program and delivered the valedictory. The style of the oration and its delivery were highly characteristic of the student Droll, at the same time serious, and to the last degree, honest. The diplomas were then presented by Danforth Keyes, President of the Board. A Quartette by Messrs. VanDeMark and Kishpaugh, Mrs. W. H. Dorr and Miss Julia Pomeroy was sung, and the audience was dismissed with the benediction.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

The cold waves are regular.

Farmers have commenced haying.

The attendance at the strawberry festival given on G. W. Jackson's lawn, was all that could be expected and all enjoyed the occasion very much.

The village school closed on Friday after a very successful term, taught by Prof. Parker.

Upwards of 20 took in the excursion to Devils lake Sunday.

G. P. Waring has erected a fine watering place on north Church st., for the accommodation of the public.

Misses Mary and Jennie Osgood left Thursday to visit friends in Clinton Co., for a few weeks.

W. H. Arner is quite poorly again.

Miss Allie McNeal, of Milan, has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. John Arner and family, for the past week.

Miss Ella Jackson spent a few days in Tecumseh with her friend Miss Josie Schreder, and attended the Commencement exercises.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Wilson attended the Musical Commencement at Adrian College Thursday evening and Friday attended the Commencement at Blissfield of which school Prof. H. C. Wilson is principal.

Miss Kittie Clark visited her friend Miss Belle Barlow at Adrian College Thursday and Friday and attended the Musical graduating exercises.

Mr. Weddie Bush, of Brooklyn, N. Y., arrived the latter part of last week to spend a few weeks with his grandmother, Mrs. J. Hall.

Misses Roe and Kate Wolf, Miss Belle Barlow's College friends, made her a visit Monday and Tuesday, returning to Adrian Wednesday and from there to their home at Tiffin, Ohio.

Miss Ella Jackson left for Jackson Wednesday to visit her friends Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Howe and spend the Fourth with them.

Mrs. G. W. Jackson wishing to close out her millinery business, respectfully invites her friends to call at their earliest convenience and settle their accounts.

On Tuesday morning, wishing a day for recreation, we hitched to the three seated conveyance, and took our friends Misses Ada Linn, Allie McNeal, Kittie Clark, Belle Barlow, Kate and Roe Wolf, and well equiped with robes, ulsters, etc., and a supply of various refreshments, we drove to Sand Lake, arriving at Putnam's hotel at 11 A. M., where we spent the day very pleasantly.

After a sickness of a few days with the terrible disease consumption, Miss Minnie Smith's spirit took its flight to its God who gave it. The funeral was held at the Christian church at Britton on Wednesday morning, the Rev. Geo. Price officiating. The attendence was very large; her many friends deeply mourn her departure and their loss.

It was our pleasure to enjoy a very pleasant and profitable time at the Commencement exercises of the College and High School at Adrian, held in the Opera House, Thursday and Friday of last week. The exercises were very interesting and as fine as we ever attended. The graduating class in music consisted of eight members under Prof. Rupp of which Miss Miss Belle Barlow of our village was a member, was held Thursday evening. The attendance was very large and the exercises passed off with honor to those in the class. Miss Barlow, besides assisting in the quartettes also entertained the audience with a fine instrumental solo, one of Listz compositions; when her name was called there was an applause of greeting from all parts of the house, and as she finished was encored from the entire house. She received a good many very fine gifts from friends having made a good many friends since her stay at the College. On Friday evening she furnished some music for Prof. H. C. Wilson's Commencement at Blissfield.

Friday afternoon we attended the graduating exercises of the high school held at the opera house. The class consisted of 13 ladies and 3 gentlemen. An essay, The Fountain of Youth, by Miss Florence French, was a very fine production. She received a good many presents and a fine collection of flowers from her friends.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

To-day church bells toll for two persons exit through "gates ajar." They are G. M. Webster of this place and Mrs. Sheeler of Cambridge. The latter lived in that town before its boundaries were strictly defined, and leaves a host of friends and relatives.

The closing school exercises were a success. The graduating class numbered seven, and received floral tributes enough for forty, besides the merited approval of Hon. David Parsons of Detroit, who addressed the packed audience on the subject of Parental Co-operation with Teachers. Being a personal friend of Prof, Townshend you can guess that he prescribed a thorough cultivation of the virtue of which most teachers find few samples. Even a poor orator could have gained inspiration from such surroundings, for the girls transformed the stage into a bower and spared no effort to impress their class motto, (viz) Labor accomplishes all things, upon memory.

Where essays are all good, and each task performed faultlessly, it may seem unjust to toss an extra spray of laurel, yet six of the graduates will not envy, and are proud of Mary Burkhart, who ranks first of the class. They have had all the advantages parents could give them; and it is seldom a half dozen represents so much money, which Mary offsets with a ticket-of-leave from the Coldwater orphan school. She was transferred to that asylum from depths her memory cannot fathom, and eight and one-half years ago was brought to this village, and again fished out of wretchedness, by James O'Donnell, and placed in care of Mr. and Mrs. Deacon Irwin who having had no children of their own, have shared their home with ten of the scattered. It is but fair to add the tenth was accepted at a time of life when most people are excused from mission work. At that time Mary had not advanced beyond the alphabet, and Mrs. Irwin devoted the first year and a half to teaching her at home, and then firmly discouraged all attempts to retard her pupil's progress at school. Study has been laid by two years of the intervening time on account of the ill health of her benefactors, but her theme, "Influence" exhibits more than one trait of character, besides perseverance that entitles her to a place among those known as the world's favorites.

COAL! COAL! COAL!

Last week in my absense, some flies were issued, giving my prices on coal. In the hurry of composition and proof reading some of the figures were wrongly stated. I therefore state herewith my present prices for coal which I am prepared to stand to.

I have already taken orders for the celebrated Wilkesbarre coal at the following figures:

Chestnut,	$6.20	per ton.
Stove,	6.40	" "
No. 4	6.40	" "
Egg,	5.75	" "
Grate,	5.60	" "

I will furnish the Scranton coal or any other kind furnished by other dealers, at 20 cents per ton below these figures, if my customers prefer other coals than the Wilkesbarre at this reduced price. I propose to give 2000 pounds to a ton and all coal will be screened. I shall give my patrons the best coal the market affords, and at as low prices as possible on both soft and hard coal.

Another postoffice war is raging at Britton. The new postmaster, E. C. Rauch, having decided to remove, it becomes necessary to appoint another man in his place.

THE VESCELIUS CONCERT CO.

The Library Association have engaged the celebrated Vescelius Concert Co. for an entertainment, which will take place to-morrow (Friday) evening, July 3d. This troupe is composed of the three Vescelius sisters, Misses Louise, Frances and Eva, Mr. E. J. Austin, humorist and cartoonist, Mr. Paul Bernheim, pianist, and Prof. W. M. Evans, Director. It is a strong musical combination and their concerts are said to give unbounded satisfaction. From a large number of flattering press notices, we gather the following:

London, Eng., Times: The singing of the three young Americans, the Misses Vescelius, was a delightful surprise, coming before the English public in so quiet unassuming manner we were not prepared for so great a treat. They are all fine soloists, but their singing in concerted pieces is something unusual. Their voices blend with a harmony that is truly wonderful. They will prove quite an acquisition to the concert stage.

Chicago Times: The Vescelius Trio, Louise, Frances and Eva, are giving a series of highly successful concerts in the vicinity, of which our exchanges speak in terms of unqualified praise. These young ladies are former residents of this city, and are well known in musical circles here. They possess exceptionally fine voices and merit all the success they are meeting with.

Journal, Lansing, Mich: The Vescelius sisters, Louise, Frank and Eva, assisted by other talented artists, presented our people with a rich musical feast last evening. The numerous encores attested their popularity and success in pleasing an audience inclined to be rather cold and critical at the opening concert. During an intermission a vote was taken by acclamation, and a committee appointed to arrange for a return visit of these charming singers.

A HEAVY THUNDER SHOWER.

Shortly after noon last Saturday, Tecumseh was visited by the heaviest thunder storm of the season. A big black cloud came rolling up from the west and within thirty minutes after it appeared in the horizon it burst upon us, and the streets were flooded with a deluge of water. During the storm two or three heavy bolts of lightning occurred which struck in several places in the vicinity.

Charley Heck, who was in Heck's mill at the time, received a severe shock which knocked him senseless, and he did not recover from the shock for several hours.

Another bolt went down the lightning rod at Comfort's mill and passed into the race at the east end of the mill, killing a lot of fish. Over a peck of dead fish were gathered from the race, besides large numbers that floated down stream.

The wires leading into the central telephone office were greatly demoralized and some of them ruined. Mr. Baker, of Adrian, came over on Monday and put them all in proper shape, so that by Monday night the hellоing could proceed as usual. Several fine shade trees about the village were blown down or injured.

While Mr. Albert Hyde was in the act of raising a window at the Universalist church, in which the painters had been at work, a flash of lightning blinded him and he fell over backwards, striking upon a pew back. It was thought at first that he had two ribs broken, but such was not the fact. He was severely bruised however and will have to carry himself quiet for a few days.

The M. & O. road will make excursion rates between Toledo and Devils Lake, and Battle Creek and Devils Lake, on the 3d and 4th, insts., to enable people on their line to attend the grand opening of the new hotel. The fare for the round trip will be as follows: Dundee, 60c; Clarksville, 55c; Britton, 50c; Ridgeway, 45c; Tecumseh, 40; Tipton, 30c; Onsted 20c. West of the Lake the regular trains will accommodate passengers, but a special train will leave the lake at 6 P.M. on the 4th, to run through to Toledo which will give passengers at this end of the line an opportunity to return home in the evening. People can go up from here on Friday evening, attend the big ball and remain during the entire day of the 4th.

Detroit Free Press: Leonard D. Sale, Washington correspondent of the Free Press, has been appointed by Commissioner Martin V. Montgomery, librarian of the bureau of patents. The new position has a salary of $1,800 a year. Mr. Sale is an old and popular Michigan Democrat, and a well-known and active Detroit journalist. He was a gallant union soldier, and will fill the position with credit.

We have the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with Mr. Sale. We believe him to be eminently qualified for the position and congratulate him upon his good fortune.

Remember the Vescelius Concer to-morrow evening.

NURSING.

How an Invalid Should be Nursed in a Country Home.

When a woman is ill her hair should be carefully cared for from the beginning of the illness. If it is neglected and allowed to become tangled, it is very difficult to make it smooth and tidy again. It must be parted at the back, gently combed every morning, and arranged in two braids, with the ends securely tied with a piece of old ribbon. Two braids are better than one, for they can be drawn out of the way on each side, not to interfere with the head resting comfortably on the pillow.

In fever, or in any disease affecting the brain, where it is desirable to keep the head cool, it is well to have a soft hair pillow, or one stuffed with cut rags or paper torn into small pieces. Being less soft than the usual feather one, the head would not sink into it, and so would not be kept as warm. Some people particularly object to a hard pillow, and then it should not be used, as the discomfort would more than counterbalance the good derived from it. When the forehead is hot, it is a great relief to use frequently some cooling lotion. Put a few lumps of ice in a bowl, and pour on them a little alcohol; dip a single thickness of old, thin cotton into the liquid, and lay it on the forehead. The cotton must not, on any account, be doubled, as the cooling effect is produced by the evaporation of the alcohol, and the more quickly this takes place the more effectual it is. If ice can not be procured, bathe the face with equal parts of alcohol and cold water, taking care not to get it into the eyes, and fan until it is dry. When the eyes are affected, and cold applications are ordered, kept small squares of fine linen, or pieces of an old handkerchief, on a lump of ice, or, if this is not to be had, in a basin of fresh spring water. When one is placed on the eye, remove it before it is entirely dry, and put it away to be burned. If there is any discharge from the eye, this is particularly necessary. No piece should be used a second time.

In injuries to the head, ice is often used to lessen the tendency to inflammation, and it is not always easy or possible in the country to get an ice bag to hold it. The best substitute is a piece of India rubber cloth, about half a yard square. Crack the ice in small lumps, put it in the middle of the cloth, and, gathering the corners loosely together, tie a string tightly around it, like a pudding prepared to boil. Leave plenty of room for the ice so it will adjust itself easily to the shape of the head. Snow is much better than ice, when it can be obtained, as it is more easily arranged. Soft towels should be kept wrapped around the ends of the rubber cloth, where it is tied, to absorb any water that may escape, and it should be watched, that none may drip under the pillow or into the bed, unobserved.

Hot fomentations, although soothing the pain of the sufferers, are often the cause of much discomfort to the nurse applying them. Unless she knows how to do it properly she will certainly scald her hands in wringing the cloths out of the boiling water, and many blisters will bear witness to her devotion. If the following directions are carefully followed it will be seen to be perfectly possible to avoid this catastrophe and yet do the work effectually. Place a strong towel in a basin, letting the two ends project over the rim, put a thick piece of flannel, doubled three or four times, in the middle of the towel, and pour the boiling water on it; take the dry ends of the towel, one in each hand, and twist the flannel firmly in it, lifting it out of the basin. Every drop of water can be squeezed from it in this way without touching it with the hands. When it is sufficiently dry, open the towel, and the flannel is ready for application. If turpentine or laudanum is ordered, it can be sprinkled on the cloth before it is laid on the patient. A piece of rubber cloth placed over it will help to retain the heat, and it will not have to be changed as often as if uncovered. When hops are used, they should be sewed in a flannel bag when dry, and then wrung out of boiling water as directed. It is important to have two flannels, that one may be ready to put on the moment the other is removed, thus keeping up a continuous heat, and running no risk of the sick person taking cold while waiting for a fresh one.

When it is desirable to use dry heat, it can be applied by means of salt heated in the oven, and put into flannel bags; fine sand is some times substituted for salt, and bran can be used as being lighter than either, although it loses its heat more quickly. An India rubber hot water bag is a great comfort, and not an expensive luxury; one to hold a quart can be bought for a dollar and a quarter, and with proper care will last for years. The top must be very tightly screwed on, or there is danger of leaking. The best substitute, if one can not be procured, is a lager beer bottle, the patent stopper renders it impossible for the water to escape, which it is very apt to do with a common cork, unless it fits perfectly, and is driven in with especial care.—Elizabeth Robinson Scovil, in Country Gentleman.

—The total value of the green fruit received in New York by importation during the past year amounts to $5,067,851, while the duties received aggregated $690,882.41. The increase in value over 1883 is $332,494, with a decrease in customs duties of $54,482.33. There was increase in all the principal varieties imported, except in oranges from the Mediterranean, the falling off in that line of importation being probably due to the increased production of this fruit in the South, as well as the constantly growing supply from the West India Islands. The fruit from nearer home is just as good and arrives in a much better condition.—N. Y. Tribune.

NO SOJERING.

A Partner in a Theater Who Wanted the Orchestra to Earn Their Money.

Once upon a time, as fairy stories commence, Colonel Wood, of Chicago, the museum man, took in as partner in his theater a native from Arkansaw, who thought the business would just suit him, although he knew no more about museums or theaters than a dog knows about Choctaw.

The evening of the day the bargain was concluded the new partner attended the performance, for the first time in his life, selecting a seat in the parquette, close to the orchestra. His attention was divided between the play and the operations of the orchestra, the latter perhaps getting the lion's share. It was noticed by Mr. Wood, who was also present, that when watching the musicians he would frown and crochet his brow, and work his jaws on his quid of natural leaf more vigorously than usual.

The next morning he met the leader of the orchestra (a Frenchman), and accosted him:

"See here, pardner, now thet I've got a right to chip in when I see anything goin' wrong about this theayter, havin' bought an interest in it, I'd like ter ask you why you hev such a lot of chumps in the music box with you?"

"Chumps!" said the astonished leader, "ma foi, what is zat chump? I don't not know him."

"Why, sticks, to be sure; fellers who ether don't know their business or are playing off on you."

"Mon Dieu, c'est impossible," replied the Frenchman; "ve have ze best orchestra in Cheecago; absolute parfaitement."

"Oh, come off, now; you can't fool me if I am from Arkansaw. I watched your fellers last night, and you didn't, your luck was turned to most on 'em. It's a Mary Ann fact that they didn't play more'n half the time. Why, that feller who blows the long horn that shoves in and out was foolin' with his instrument nearly all the evenin'; the old fogy who pretended to play the bull fiddle only chipped in about every five minutes; the Dutchman who run the drums didn't hit the big one but twice to my certain knowledge; the fiddlers all 'sojered' more or less, and in fact the whole caboodle acted just as though they thought it didn't make much difference whether they played most of the time or not. Even you, yourself, fooled a good deal swingin' your fiddle bow around instead of gettin' all you could outen your catgut."

"But, ma cher Major, you seem not to comprehend. Ve haf to play just as ze music is written. Ze great Bach, Offenbach and othaire 'mastaires of ze devine music have put in ze rests for ze different instruments all through ze piece, and we haf strictly to follow him."

"You do, eh?" said the stubborn Major; "well, we'll have to reform here. I hain't been brung up on a plantation for nothin'. Why, sir, before the war I used to run over a hundred niggers, and you fellers did more sojerin' last evenin' than the whole gang of em'd do in a week. Say, you get a thunderin' salary, and probably consider yourself way up in music, don't you, now?"

Leader (with a shrug): "Oui, I not complain of my salarie; he is ver good; but I haf, var you call it?—reputacionne. I haf compose ze several pieces music mi self rich haf been ze grand success."

"Oh, you hev, hev you? Wall, I'll tell you what I want you to do. You just tackle your sheets of hiarogliphics and do away with all those rests old Offenback and the other chaps put in, so's the men'll have something to do all the time. You can't make me believe thet ther's any sense in payin' a lot of pirates to come here and fool away their time evenin's doin' next to nothin'."

By this time the Gaul was mad; that is to say he had a hot gall; and if Colonel Wood had not happened along just then, there might have been a row between the new proprietor and the musician. The Colonel, however, by a few bland words, calmed the offended violinist and explained to the Arkansaw man, that, hard as it seemed to a frugal man to see his employes apparently wasting so much time, they were really keeping time all the time, and all well-regulated orchestras had to have just about so many men to produce the best effect on a critical audience.

The Major's only reply was: "Well, I'll be dinged!"—Peck's Sun.

The Telephone Monopoly.

The Indiana Legislature has just passed a bill limiting the rental of telephones in that State to three dollars per month, with a reduction of fifty cents when two or more are used by the same firm. The telephone has become a public necessity, but it is in the hands of a powerful monopoly, who have become enormously rich within a short time from the burdensome tax they have imposed upon the people. New inventions have been quickly bought up or outlawed by the use of immense capital, thus leaving the public still to suffer. There seems to be but one way by which the people can be protected, and that is by State legislation, and the example of Indiana should be quickly followed by every other State. Three dollars per month will afford the telephone company a big interest upon the investment, while they are now in some cities exacting the enormous tariff of eight to fifteen dollars per month. It is time to stop it, and it is to be hoped legislators will afford their constituents the needed relief without loss of time.

TRANSFUSING BLOOD.

Some Curious Experiments in Which Dead Animals Were Restored to Life.

The subject operated upon was a medium sized terrier dog. It was secured by bonds and an incision made in an artery in his neck, by which the animal was bled to death. He certainly passed through all the symptoms of dying and soon after the last blood issued from the wound his frame became rigid, and his eyes assumed the glassy glare of death. The room was kept at a temperature of seventy degrees Fahrenheit while the dog lay for three hours dead. By this time he had become very stiff and cold. He was now placed in a warm water bath that was constantly maintained at a temperature of 100 degrees, and was continually and thoroughly stirred, and as he became pliant his limbs were gently worked about and his whole body rendered supple. A half pint of hot water was now passed into his stomach through a hard rubber tube that was forced down his oesophagus. When this was accomplished the mouth of a rubber tube, attached to a bellows, was introduced into his windpipe, and as the bellows were provided with a double valve, by which the air could be withdrawn as well as inhaled, the dog's nose was securely fastened up.

A large and powerful Newfoundland dog that had been obtained for the purpose had been tied near by and was now bled, while the attending surgeon proceeded to adjust the transfusing apparatus and began to slowly inject the live dog's blood into the dead one. Simultaneously Mr. Armitage began slowly working the respiratory bellows while I kept rubbing the animal and bending his limbs and body to facilitate circulation. We could not have been more anxious about the issue of our efforts if they had been made on a human being instead of a dumb brute. When a pint of fresh blood had been injected I could see some change about the eyes of the dog. But no one spoke. One thought was common to all—would life come back? In a few moments more there was certainly a convulsive tremor noticeable in the body. Mr. Armitage in undisguised excitement said to the surgeon, "Press the blood." In a minute or two the dog gasps, and soon attempts to eject the respiratory tube, which was accordingly withdrawn. This was followed by gasps and a catching of the breath, while the eyes grew brighter and more natural. The rubbing and blood injecting were yet applied, and the dog was struggling as if in a fit. But his efforts soon become less violent and he begins a low whine. A compress was now placed on the artery, and in twenty-two minutes after the first blood was injected, he sits up, after having been dead three hours and twenty minutes. The dog then drank a broth that had been prepared for him in case of his revival, and soon got up and walked about. He was furnished a comfortable bed near the stove, and from this time forward his recovery was so rapid that in two days he was turned out to run the streets. He is now a rugged character in good health, with seemingly no bad remembrance of his resurrection.

The second case was tested on the second day of December. The subject selected was a calf six weeks old. The details of treatment were similar to the foregoing, except for greater convenience a hot vapor bath was substituted for the warm water immersion. The calf, after being bled to death, was left for twelve hours before its resuscitation was undertaken, as it was desirable to see if a longer death interval could be successfully passed over. The fresh blood injected into its circulatory system was drawn from a yearling steer. It required thirty-five minutes to restore the calf to life after the transfusion of the first blood. The calf then drank some warm milk, and has since grown and thriven without perceptible interruption or ailment.

The next experiment was of a different character, and was made with a view to see if a drowned animal could be restored to life. A small dog was forced under water and drowned. He was then taken out and laid with his head inclined downward to drain his lungs of water, and left four hours in a warm room. It will be noticed that this was quite a different and more hopeless case than the preceding, as the dog had all his own blood yet in his veins. After an hour in the warm bath, and constant rubbing and working, his veins were opened at three different points to admit of the escape of any blood that might issue from them, and the injecting apparatus was vigorously applied to the arterial system. After fifty minutes of anxious labor signs of revivification were observable. The poor beast whined piteously as life was being once more enthroned within him. Notwithstanding great care was taken of him, he remained weak for several days, but seems now to be in good condition.

A fourth case was recently tried, in which the subject was a dog that was strangled and afterward frozen, and it was unsuccessful. After an hour of labor no signs of returnable life were not evable. It is believed, however, that this experiment may yet succeed and the life of a frozen animal be restored.

It is proper to add that, in the first cases, after the blood ceased to flow from the wound measures were taken to prevent air from entering the circulatory system as the animal cooled, and in all the cases the respiratory apparatus was nicely adjusted to the capacity of the animal. If the lungs in any case had been ruptured or overstrained, hemorrhage would have subsequently ensued.—James L. Finch, in Beaver News.

—In Paris they have "morphine parties" of the small and early kind. Those invited to such little gatherings are known to the hostess as being in the habit of resisting this to which flesh is heir by subcutaneous injections of the narcotic above named. The injection is performed with a little instrument, the manufacture of which is passing from the surgical instrument maker to the jeweler, and is becoming an objet d'art. Dyspepsia.

Dyspepsia.

Gentlemen:—I feel it my duty to say in speaking of B. B. B. (Burdock Blood Bitters), that it is the best medicine I ever took. I suffered two or three years from wind and dyspepsia as well as from liver and kidney complaint. I was not able to attend to my business. My wife was afflicted in much the same way. We read of your Bitters in the papers and made up our minds that we would try them. The result is my wife and I began to improve at once, and I am now able to do more hard work than before in ten years. It relieved my kidney troubles as well. We both wish you, the makers of it, Godspeed.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and youthful beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have so fully met all the requirements needful for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp. HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and usefulness to every quarter of the globe. Its unparalleled success can be attributed to but one cause: the entire fulfilment of its promises.

The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction.

The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this article are not transient, like those of alcoholic preparations, but remain a long time, which makes its use a matter of economy.

Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1878.

C. I. Hood & Co.: Gentlemen— I have had ringworm humor and salt-rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores, so, also, my head and face. I have had any number of doctors in the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it I found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I felt forced to try it, although I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,
EDGAR F. WHITMAN.

Biliousness, Sick Headache.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gents—Please send me by express two bottles HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA and a few Cook Books for distribution. Your preparation has worked wonders in the case of my wife, who has been troubled with sick headache and biliousness for years. She only took one-half teaspoonful at a dose, and has not been so well for five years as now. She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from those severe headaches. She has not taken any of any account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others some good, and we must have it in the house.

Yours truly,
HOMER B. NASH.

OFFICE BOYS.

The Wonderful Love of an Office Youngster for His Mate.

"Two souls with but a single thought,
Two hearts that beat as one."

It is probable that Damon and Pythias were on exceedingly friendly terms, and that something superior to a sneaking regard for each other warmed the breasts of David and Jonathan; but the love which existed between either pair was cold indeed compared to that fervent affection which unties and welds together the fond hearts of the two boys employed in one office. When David, apostrophizing the stricken Jonathan, exclaimed: "Thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women," he thought he was putting it pretty strong. And so he was. Had he said "passing the love of the office boy to his mate," he would have capped the climax, but nobody would have believed him.

Nowhere else can be found the acme of pure, unadulterated, disinterested, unselfish, all-abounding love that fills the respective breasts of the two boys employed in a common office.

The evidences of this beautiful affection are many and manifest. Is one of the loving pair to go on an errand, the other, fearing that the idol of his soul may be knocked down or run over or drowned or drawn and quartered en route, can not be persuaded from accompanying him, save by the most peremptory orders to the contrary; and even then the lover who is left will be anxious and uneasy and fit for nothing until his mate returns; nay, it is more than likely that his feelings will so get the better of him that he will start out in search of his comrade upon the first convenient opportunity, your positive command to the contrary notwithstanding.

Are the two boys sitting together, after their custom, communing soul with soul, and is a boy wanted to do something or other, each is so disinterestedly desirous that the other shall answer the summons, and thus give new evidence to his employers of the treasure they possess, that neither will start for many minutes. And when, after repeated and sometimes profane adjuration, one responds to the summons, the other responds likewise, and by his counsel and companionship aids and assists his compeer in the discharge of his commission, even if it be but the carrying of a bit of paper across the room.

When complaint is made of something which "the boy" has done, or something which he has left undone, how quick is each to charge the fault upon the other! Not out of ill-will or desire to escape in his own person the results of the error, fault, shortcoming, overdoing, or whatever else it may be. Not at all, but each knows that the censure or chastisement which the offender, when discovered, will receive must prove of incalculable benefit in the end, and each, therefore, is willing, nay, desirous, that the other, whom he loves so much better than himself, shall alone enjoy the castigatory emolument, and that himself shall be robbed of what could not but prove of inestimable good, not only for the present moment, but for all time to come.

And what happy hours they pass together! Quite unconscious of all things else, or even the duties which it is their province to perform, they will sit together for hours, the flame of mutual love irradiating and glorifying their features, and each pouring into the ear of either the most ardent assurances of the fond affection which fills each heart. While in this rapt condition they are oblivious to everything. They know not that their tongues are more noisy than a brace of sawmills. They are unconscious of the groans and grunts that make the air sonorous with discontent. They only know that they are luxuriating in the happiness of affectionate propinquity. And when, at last, they become cognizant of the universal demand to "stop that confounded chatter," each has been so lost in admiration of the other's eloquent discourse that he cries out, and, as he thinks, truthfully: "'Twan't me!" But this disclaimer is uttered out of no wish to bring the other to grief or to escape consequences himself. No; he merely desires to give to his fellow the full honor which should be accorded to the generator of so much edifying conversation.

It is pleasing, too, to see how devotedly each is every ready to place himself at the other's service. An office boy has been known, even when engaged in some necessary piece of work, to forsake his labor utterly that he might assist his mate in a difficult sum at marbles or an intricate problem in devil's fiddle, or help him to understand the meaning of some passage in "The Boy Highwaymen," or other equally recondite literary work.

But why accumulate evidence of what must be self-evident to all? Truly, the love of the office boy for his mate is not exceeded by any other form of human love, unless it be the love of his mate for the office boy.—Boston Transcript.

Treatment of Hydrophobia.

A native surgeon, M. Nursimula, has written a letter to the editor of the Times of India, from which it would appear that he has treated successfully a case having all the symptoms of hydrophobia. The treatment adopted was the subcutaneous injection of the sixteenth part of a grain of atropia. The breathing became infrequent (twelve per minute) and the pulse slowed to the rate of fifty per minute. A quarter of a grain of morphia was injected hypodermically as an antidote to the atropia and this was repeated several times. The symptoms disappeared the third day after the onset of the malady. The patient was a soldier, aged twenty-four, who had been bitten by a dog the week before the symptoms resembling hydrophobia appeared. The Lancet comments thus on this case: "If the case were one of hydrophobia, it must be allowed that the period of incubation was very short; the dog is not stated to have been mad, and it must not be forgotten that the presence of symptoms closely resembling, if not identical with, hydrophobia, does not prove that the case is one of genuine rabies."

The Model Farm.

The Keota (Iowa) Eagle has at last found a western man who is satisfied with a fifty acre farm. His name is Artemus Fisher, and he lives one mile and a half south of Keota. The Eagle tells the story of his management and of his success as follows:

He keeps one team of horses, three first class cows, and a nice little drove of the best hogs. He milks his cows for the creamery, and they made him nearly $200 last year; will perhaps do better this year. He will sell $500 worth of hogs this year, and have thirty stockers to keep over. He has $200 worth of flax-seed to sell; has an abundance of hay and grain to keep his stock in first-class condition during the winter. He keeps everything in apple-pie order about his farm; his cows revel in clover up to their eyes; he attends to feeding, watering and milking as regularly as the clock strikes, hence he gets the best results with the least possible feed. He keeps his stock under cover, and never allows any animal to shiver in the fence corners. He has a barn that is a model of convenience and economy. It is snow-proof, and as warm as the old kitchen. He has a first-class selection of fruit—not a large orchard, but a choice selection of the varieties that thrive and bear the best in this locality. Everything about the farm bears marks of intelligence, thrift and economy. Besides making a living for himself and the "old lady," he will sell at least $800 worth of stuff off his fifty acres this year, and not be exceeding former years either. There is no rush or hurry about this model farm. Everything goes off quietly and regularly. The expenses are very small and the gains sure.

He Kept the Whole House Awake

Washington, D. C.—Mr. F. O. McCleary, a prominent solicitor of patents of this city, was troubled for several weeks with a severe cough, which not only deprived him of sleep but annoyed others. The only thing which did him any good, he says, was the new prepasation Red Star Cough Cure, a purely vegetable compound, free from opiates, narcotics or poisons of any kind.

A hotel in Boston built of stone and brick 96 and 69 feet frontage with basement and seven stories above the sidewalk, was moved nearly 100 feet in order to make a change in the street. One side was supported by eight granite columns twelve feet high, the whole building weighing 5,000 tons beside the furniture. The occupants of the stores and the hotel were not disturbed in the removal.

A Great Discovery.

Mr. Wm. Thomas, of Newton, Ia., says: "My wife has been seriously affected with a cough for twenty-five years, and this spring more severely than ever before. She had used many remedies without relief, and being urged to try Dr. King's New Discovery, did so, with most gratifying results. The first bottle relieved her very much, and the second bottle has absolutely cured her. She has not had so good health for thirty years." Trial bottles Free at C. A. Wright & Co's Drug Store. Large size $1,00.

Vasser girls ate 692 pounds of candy last year. Sweets to the sweet. But alas! they ate also forty bushels of onions.

The Secret of Wealth.

Broken down invalids do you wish to gain flesh, to acquire an appetite, to enjoy a regular habit of body, to obtain refreshing sleep, to feel and know that every fiber and tissue of your system is being braced up and renovated. If so commence at once a course of Golden Seal Bitters. In one week you will be convalescent. In a month you will be well. Don't despair because you have a weak constitution. Fortify the body against disease by purifying all the fluids with Golden Seal Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, are rendered disease proof by this great invigorant. Ruinous bills for medical attendance may be avoided by counteracting the first symptoms of sickness with these Bitters. They are recommended from friend to friend, and the sale increases daily. We warrant a cure. They are a positive cure also for all female complaints. In these diseases they have no equal. Take no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

Taken together, all the beauties of art and nature do not interest the inquisative female so much as the view she gets through the key hole.

News About Town.

It is the current report about town that Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs is making some remarkable cures with people who are troubled with Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis, and Consumption. Baker & Hall will give any person a trial bottle free of cost. It is guaranteed to relieve and cure. Price 50 cents and $1.

In the literary as well as the military world, the most powerful abilities will often be found concealed under a rustic garb.

In no other medicinal preparations have the results of the most intelligent study and scientific inquiry been so steadily and progressively utilized as in Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It leads the list as a truly scientific preparation for all blood diseases.

A little dot of a girl coaxed two nickel from her father on Thanksgiving day, saying she would use one for candy and the other she would give to the missionaries. Before executing her expressed intentions she lost one while at play, and running to her mamma, said: "Oh, mamma, I have lost my missionary nickel."

"That tired feeling" from which you suffer so much, particularly in the morning, is entirely thrown off by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

A metal hitherto unknown, and which is said to be likely to supplant nickel in general use, has been discovered in the Lehigh Valley.

A celerated physician declares that "Hunt's Remedy will cure any case of kidney disease that can be cured."

A celebrated doctor says that "other preparations as substitutes for Hunt's Kidney Remedy, are worthless in comparison to it."

THE GRADUATING CLASS.

EIGHTEENTH ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT OF THE TECUMSEH HIGH SCHOOL

A Literary Program of Unusual Excellence—Conferring of Diplomas—Beautiful Array of Floral Gifts.

Another graduating class has stepped across the threshold from school days into active life. The commencement program which was presented at the opera house on Thursday evening of last week was one of more than usual excellence, in both its musical and literary features. The essays of the six graduates evinced a careful study and thorough preparation and they were all nicely delivered. The selections of music were appropriately chosen and admirably rendered. The singing of the lady quartette of Adrian added materially to this portion of the exercises. The opera house was crowded to suffocation and was a literal wilderness of beautiful faces, fans and flowers. The floral testimonials have never been surpassed, either in quantity or beauty, at any of our recent commencements. A mammoth floral horse shoe was suspended to the scene at the rear of the stage, and either end of the platform in front was beautifully set with floral designs and living flowers. The class returned to Mrs. Tilton their formal thanks for her valuable assistance in preparing the stage ornamentation. The class motto, "Through Difficulties to the Stars," in large fancy letters was attached to a dropscene near the front of the stage.

We append the program as given, the class song, and the essays of the graduates. The latter consume considerable space, but we are inclined to the belief that our readers will consider it a good innovation to curtail our usual editorial comment and give the addresses in full.

THE PROGRAM.

Music, Overture to Masaniello, two pianos—Misses Anderson, Hayden, Fisher, Henderson.
Prayer—Rev. J. Phelps.
Music, Vocal Quartette, "Legends"—Mrs. A. K. Johnson, Mrs. J. S. Holmes, Mrs. Winship, Miss Stella Mason.

Oration, Legislation for the Laboring Man—Lester H. Dewey.
Essay, Defense of Nantippe—S. Mabel Hayden.
Music, Piano duo, Tarantelle, opera 85—Misses Anderson and Rice.
Oration, Journalism—W. H. H. Hayden.

Music, Quartet, Ave Marie—Mrs. A. K. Johnson, Mrs. J. S. Holmes, Mrs. Winship, Miss Stella Mason.
Benediction.

CLASS SONG.

LESTER H. DEWEY.

Our happy days in school are gone,
And we at last arrive
Where now 'tis ours to greet the dawn,
And take the honors we have won.
As class of eighty-five.

School of our youth, success attend,
And may you long survive,
With footsteps ever onward bend,
Pursuing onward to the end,
Farewell to "eighty-five."

We now must face a world of care,
Yet may we ever strive
In future, as in past, to dare
"To do the right, and never despair,"
We'll still be "eighty-five."

Reaction.

BY HERBERT L. MCNAIR.

More than a century ago, you might have seen reading and studying in the dim, quiet halls of Christ College, Cambridge, or musing in the shade of the massive elms that surround and almost cover the place, a plain, quiet, unassuming man, extremely diffident and almost solitary among the crowds that surrounded him. But if nature had not dealt with him kindly in regard to personal appearance, she had yet endowed him with an intellect of wonderful acuteness and profundity. While he was yet a young man, he had filled important professorships, and throughout his life he continued to startle the world with the most amazing discoveries. Newton had an insight into the workings of Nature, which none of his predecessors had ever possessed, and which few of those who came after him can attain.

Among the most wonderful discoveries were his laws of motion, of which the following is one. Action and re-action are equal and in opposite directions. The bold assertion of these laws placed him in direct antagonism to all existing schools of learning. All the philosophers of Europe rushed to the support of their pet theories. The upstart was jeered at, and inveighed against. Several years after the announcement Voltaire said that he did not suppose there were twenty men in Europe, outside of England, who believed in the Newtonian philosophy. But it rapidly gained ground and has long since superceded all others.

We cannot but wonder whether Newton, with all his deep perception of the truths of Nature, ever realized how universal was the application of the law of reaction to humanity. In religion, in politics, in finance, in every department of human progress and human endeavor we still discern the action of the law. It seems to be a deep laid principle of man's nature that opposite extremes follow close upon each other. We may consider this a fault in our nature, but it is a fact. We may compare it to a pendulum which a mighty power has set in motion, which may exceed a fixed rate. If for a moment or a century it exceeds that rate, the next period must witness a corresponding decline.

Let us glance for a moment at the course of civilization. From the beginning of history the world has been making a slow, steady march toward enlightenment. But while the world as a whole was plodding along, many individual nations have far surpassed their contemporaries, have gained their proud eminence for a time, and then fallen to the rear.

Far back in the dim ages, and so remote a period that no definite date can be assigned to it, the civilization of Assyria and Egypt for a time illumined a world of darkness. This faint glimmering was extinguished by the barbarian horde that swept over Asia in the 6th century, B.C. For a long time barbarism reigned supreme until the Greeks developed their wonderful civilization. Appropriating the best features of the Greek civilization to their own, the dense ignorant Romans carried the tide of progress still higher, and superstition of the dark ages broke in upon this last period of enlightment and progress, and out of this night came our own glorious civilization, the highest point of culture and refinement ever reached by man. And reasoning from the past to the future, we may see in the mind's eye the fruits of our labor all swept away by some barbarian invasion or by the decay of our race in virtue and energy. We may imagine a long period of darkness to be succeeded by the grand civilization of some people whom we now call savages. The progress of the world is like the advancing tide with its surface carved into undulations by the wind, its action resisted by the configuration of the shore. But despite all these trifling obstacles, it rises surely and resistlessly, and each advancing wave runs higher up the sandy beach, which at last shall be entirely submerged. One of the most powerful emotions that has ever influenced man, is the desire for liberty, a longing which has ever been most potent to inspire him to brave and generous deeds, and lift his soul above the slough of sordid selfishness. The impulse to personal and political freedom seems to have been implanted in the heart of man by a divine hand. What nation has ever been entirely without it? But it has had a gradual growth and its development is not yet complete. At the beginning of history we find the world under the patriarchal form of government, the most irresponsible, arbitrary and unreasonable mode that could be devised. Length of years was the principle requisite for the rulers, and the superannuated patriarch upon whom the power happened to fall, was obeyed with the same unquestioning reverence and devotion that was rendered to the wisest and most vigorous chieftain. This family despotism gave place to absolute monarchies, to representative forms of government, and finally, to the republic, the most perfectly regulated freedom that man has yet attained. Thus in man's progression from almost absolute slavery, to almost perfect freedom, we may trace a movement. And has this been a uniform progress? History answers that it has not. The Greek was a freeman 500 years before Christ, when the rest of the world had not yet dreamed of freedom. And the Russian of to-day is poitically a cipher when the rest of the world is ablaze with liberty. On the other hand, the Greek, who, 500 years B.C., was the freest of the free, 600 years later groaned under a most cruel despotism. The progress of freedom has been subject to the same fluctuations that have attended man's advancement in every other direction. For a hundred years the storm had been gathering that in the French revolution broke upon the devoted heads of the titled oppressors of the poor. For a century the thirty millions of France had lived upon crusts that the haughty aristocrats might feast. For a century the spark of liberty had smouldered. But the time came when the flame of freedom burst forth with unexampled fury, and the universal shout of Liberty, Equality and Fraternity, shook the monarch from his throne and Franke was a free nation. But the transition was too abrupt. Reaction followed, as violent and resistless as the first glorious deed. The grinding military despotism of Napoleon was welcomed as a relief from too much freedom. The nation spent its blood and treasure to gratify his boundless ambition. The people who boasted of having killed their oppressors, took willingly a master who ruled with a yet sterner hand. It was only the natural result of the excesses of the spirit of freedom that reaction should produce a corresponding servility. Many other examples might be adduced from history to show the effects of reaction. The intense spirit of liberty that characterized the English Revolution and the obsequious submission of Charles II's reign present an extraordinary example of reaction. The religious instinct is one of the few characteristics that emphatically distinguishes man from the brute creation. It has been asserted that no nation has yet been found which did not have some conception of a higher, nobler being, worthy of honor and worship. None can deny that the world is more truly and intelligently pious than it ever was before. But it has not reached this high plane by continuous progress. The tide of religious feeling has ebbed and flowed many times. At the close of the third century after Christ, nearly the whole of the civilized world was nominally, at least, Christian. The zeal of the early apostles bore fruit on every hand, and the church seemed on the top wave of prosperity. But its progress was too rapid for durability. The old associations and habits of thought could not be so soon broken off. Pagan ideas and superstitions were introduced and the church lost some of the vigor of pure Christianity. Its period of greatest glory was followed by a gradual decline. Under Luther's energetic touch, the retarding superfluities were removed and the structure restored in all its primeval grandeur. And thus it has been down to the present time, and thus it must be in future. The spread of Christianity is not a continuous, uninterrupted march, but a series of rapid advances sometimes made at long intervals. So we might trace the action of this law through every one of the long catalogue of human attributes, desires, struggles and successes, and find in each the constant alternation of advance, victory, following close after defeat, and defeat after victory.

The great pendulum of human destiny swings backward and forward and seems to have its share in permanently advancing, but only to drag back when it has just passed forward. But [illegible] the hands on the dial of eternal time of a higher and wider view, perceives the resultant force of these fluctuations as the hand goes through the 19th century, leaving behind it the defeats which appear to us limited range of vision, the advance movements.

The Industrial Arts

BY ROSE M. HENDERSHOT.

The industrial arts are those by the practice of which man obtains the necessaries of life. These arts are indispensable and noble, indispensable because man's life cannot be sustained without them, noble because by their proper exercise, man is enabled to carry out the plans of his Creator, and to rise far above the lower animals in the scale of organization. And yet, since by the industrial arts we satisfy those physical wants in which we agree with the lower animals, these arts might be considered ignoble. It is only man's intelligence in their pursuit that enobles them. Although in this and animals agree in the same way, yet there is a vast difference between them and their labor. Look at the inhabitant of a land where the white man has never trod, and, whether it be a land of icebergs or of perpetual summer, he must have shelter from the intense cold of the wind and storms or from the burning rays of the sun. He must also satisfy the imperative demands of hunger and thirst. If his home be in a cold climate, he appropriates to his own use the skins of animals, but if he live in a tropical clime he shelters himself from the burning heat of the sun, under a thatch or in a hut of woven grasses or sedges. In the work of animals there is a greater degree of symmetry and faultlessness than man displays. What a world of perfection and beauty we may see in the work of the insignificant insect, which man in the pride of manhood treads upon, thinking of the wonderful things that he has accomplished, and they are truly wonderful, but he can still learn useful lessons from these natural masters of art. Their work is always perfect, always complete in every part. Deception and dishonesty with which man are so well acquainted are entirely unknown to them. Look at the bee: the shape of its cell is altered only when working space forbids it to carry out its hexagonal plan. Deep under the blue water of the sea the little Polyp toils unceasingly throughout its brief life. Its labor results in the beautiful coral, which, strive as he may, man cannot imitate. And man admits his inferiority as a workman when he appropriates to his own use the fruits of the little insect's foil. We admire the work of this little animal not only for its beauty of form and tint, but also for the vastness of the structure reared. Islands and reefs are built, in the midst of the waves and in defiance of the storms on a scale of grandeur and magnitude, compared with which the walls of Babylon, the great wall of China and the Pyramids of Egypt sink into insignificance. Man often appears as a copyist of animals far beneath him and he confesses as much by the names he gives them; as, the mason-wasp, the quarrying sea-slugs and others equally applicable. He recognizes in the bird an exquisite architect, in the silk-worm, a most beautiful weaver. "Each is a perfect crafts man and each has its tools always at hand." No questions on tariff laws, workingmen's bills or divisions of labor ever agitate the individuals of the animal world. Each does that for which it is best adapted and finds its happiness in working out the plan that God has given it, perfect in the beginning. Herein lies one great difference between man and animal. Even while we so much admire the perfection of the animal's work we cannot fail to notice the mechanical way in which it labors. While man has no instincts to guide him in the performance of his tasks; instead he has a definite object in view and an ideal to which he strives to give expression in material form. To man no perfected plan is given, but powers of the mind, by the cultivation of which, he is enabled to form his own plans, and thus man rises far above the lower animals, instead of remaining on a level with them, where his physical nature places him. Man when once raised above the savage state, is never satisfied with present attainments, but is always striving for something better. Not so the lower animals; they obey the same laws to-day that they did hundreds of years ago; to them the past, present and future are blended into one; they remember naught of the past and look forward to no future; they live only in the present, while to man, the past and the future are as two views, in the one, every outline is clearly wrought and a single defect mars the beauty of the whole. In the other, we have a vision of wonderful grandeur and beauty which we are to reproduce in all its details. In all the inventions and improvements one characteristic of man is clearly seen, that is, his helplessness. Each workman is dependent upon others for assistance in developing his ideal. It is exceedingly difficult for any one to live long in a state above that of mere animal existence, independent of his fellowmen, and history shows us that it is absolutely impossible for him to rise above the plane of animal life unaided. That he may develop one of his many faculties to the highest point attainable in this life, he must give a large share of time and thought to the exercise of this faculty at the expense of the full development of others. That he may do this he must have the support of those who can supply him with the necessary tools, the preparation of which, would involve loss of time and distraction of thought for him. In the manufacture of the watch one person does not construct the whole; instead, each performs the part for which he has the greatest natural or acquired ability, and though each part would have little value by itself, yet when all are placed in their proper relations to each other, they form a wonderful piece of workmanship. In the practice of the industrial arts there are many degrees of skill, one person has naturally, or as the result of practice greater skill than another. But there are no degrees of skill among the lower animals. The great difference between man and the lower animals is shown by the way in which they work: the one depending entirely on instinct, the other depending on his intellect to guide him in his work. And before man and the skilled labor of his hands, the animal world with its stereotyped forms of work assumes its true position, as the lowest in the scale of development, and man stands forth monarch by conquest as well as by inheritance.

Legislation for the Laboring Man

BY LESTER H. DEWEY.

"How to improve the condition of the laboring man?" has been and is to-day, one of the most important social and economic questions before the American people.—Various are the solutions of the problem which have been brought forward and advocated. One of these, and perhaps the one which has secured to itself most adherents during the past few years is the enactment of special legislation for the laboring man. The purpose is praiseworthy, but how about the means, are they just and will they secure the desired result? Many of the efforts for special legislation in this country have been directed to the securing of an eight hour law. That is a law which shall declare that eight hours of labor constitute a day's work. This is supported by the argument that the laborer will have more time to employ in self improvement, that he will thus become better educated, and hence better able to resist the oppression of capitalists. The argument is plausible but we think unsound. At present how do the vast majority of working men spend their spare time? In self improvement or in idleness and vain expensive amusement? In our large cities many of the working men regularly spend their week's earning on Saturday night and on Sunday, not for the necessaries of life but upon those vices which tend only to degradation and misery. Is there anything to indicate that if they had more spare time it would be spent to better advantage? Will the enactment of an eight hour law make the idle enjoy the fruits of industry, the thriftless possess the rewards of energy, or the drunken sober? Moreover, those who have energy and a desire for self improvement will find time to devote to it notwithstanding long hours at work. There are numerous examples recorded of men rising to eminence from the position of day laborers, not because of much time to themselves but in spite of the fact that most of their time was given to their employer. A second argument advanced is that by reducing the hours of labor, over-production will be prevented and an impulse will thus be given to industry. Pursuing the same kind of argument, would it not give an impulse to industry to reduce production by declaring that each laborer should work with one hand tied behind him. Over-production seems to be a source of much trouble to some people, but it is doubtful if they would be better pleased with scarcity. In the past, history presents somewhat more inviting pictures in times of plenty than in times of want. There may be an over-production of articles for a certain price but there cannot be too great an abundance for the consumer. If in the desert of Sahara, where water is sold for a price, springs should be found that would yield an abundance as we have here, would this be regarded as an evil to the country? When the laborer cries out against over production he is losing sight of one of his own best interests, for most of supplies should be to him of equal importance with amount of wages. Attempts have been made in England to fix by law the minimum limit of wages and to make it a criminal offence to give or receive wages below this limit. The attempts were unsuccessful but such a law is certainly as just as one passed in the reign of Edward III, 1359, fixing the maximum price of wages. The idea of wages being kept up by legislation has gained some ground in this country. An argument advanced in its favor is, that it would prevent oppression by employers and there would be less ill feeling between laborers and capitalists and hence fewer strikes. This plea seems to be based on the idea that the laborers are not competent to take care of their own interests but that capitalists are in duty bound to hire laborers. Few employers however work upon this principle. They hire workmen for the sake of the profits of production, just as the laborer puts forth his

The base ball game last Friday afternoon between the Adrian high school nine and Harry Stevens' club, resulted in a victory for the home club. The clubs were about evenly matched and played a very good game if they were "kid nines." Capt. Stevens did the pitching for the home nine, with Sam McClure behind the bat. Both of them did very effective work. Sloan and Ley, the Adrian battery, also did some good playing. The Adrian's were "goose egged" four times, while the home received two. The score stood at the end of the seventh inning 10 to 11 in favor of the home club. Rain prevented the finishing of the game. Capt. Stevens expects to play a return game in Adrian about July 8.

THE ALUMNI REUNION.

A FINE PROGRAM PRESENTED AND AN ELEGANT SUPPER SERVED AT THE LILLEY HOUSE.

A Brief Report of the Exercises. The History in Full. List of Officers for the Coming Year.

The Executive Committee of the Alumni Society, after meditating upon the merits of several plans, finally adopted the plan of last year for the annual reunion exercises. The large dining room of the Lilley House was chosen as the place of meeting. The literary program was first presented, and then followed the supper and the after speeches. Capt. Foster's arrangements were complete in every particular, and there was room enough for all. One hundred and four members of the alumni and invited guest participated in the festivities of the occasion, and a better pleased company, we venture to say, never sat down to the festive board in Tecumseh.

Prayer—Rev. W. H. Babbitt.
Music—Knapp's Band.
Business Meeting.
Address of Welcome to the Class of '85—P. S. McKinnon.

Oration—Dr. Geo. Howell.
Select Reading—Miss Alice Wimple.
Music—Band.
Essay, The Power of Hope—Miss Julia A. Conduct.
History, Class of '77—Mrs. S. P. Hosmer.

As the usual poem was not forthcoming, the select reading by Miss Alice Wimple was thrown in to fill the vacancy, and it proved to be a very happy substitute. We regret our inability to publish the oration. It was received with marked commendation, and would read well in type, but our lack of space compels us to omit it. The address of welcome was impromptu. The response and history are given in full below.

The supper was then served, to which the guests did ample justice. After the ice cream and oranges had been properly disposed of, the toast master, Abner Wilson, assumed charge of the ceremonies. He introduced each toast with a few happy and pertinent remarks, which added much to their interest. These were the regular toasts given:

The Tecumseh High School—Response by D. McNair.
Evans Creek—Response by S. C. Stacy.
The Old Time Graduate—Response by J. W. Patterson.
The Class of '85—Response by Herbert L. McNair.
The Rising Generation—Response by P. S. McKinnon.

During the business meeting, a special committee was appointed to report a list of officers for the ensuing year. The following list was reported and was duly ratified by the meeting.

Response.

FRANK HALL.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen of the Alumni:

We of the class of '85 have finished our courses of study, have received our diplomas, and now by a pleasant custom take our places as Alumni of our dear high school. We have regret and sadness at leaving our school life, for we feel that in the lack of its training, its help and its pleasures, we lose a true friend. But your kind expressions of welcome, of good will, and of encouragement show that in your sympathizing members we gain many friends as true as the ones we lose. We thank you most heartily for the kind reception you give us, and hope and sincerely believe you will never have cause to regret our admission. We may not bring as many members, nor perhaps as much talent or genius as have some classes, but we think our desire for the honor of our common Alma Mater and for the renown of her Alumni is firm and true, and we trust our efforts for their advancement will not be entirely fruitless. Do not however expect too much of us, for remember we are but the infants of your number, and lack the influence of your wiser heads and longer experiences. And yet you are not to despise us for our youth and helplessness, but recollect that you were once where we are now. Pity our inexperience, give us good advice not only, but set us good examples, and help us in our efforts to follow them. Again we thank you for the honor of membership, and close by wishing success and happiness in our new relations.

The History.

BY MRS. S. P. HOSMER.

Members and Friends of the Alumni. You cannot imagine with what feelings of pride I have viewed my name in print as historian. It has always been my aim to be renowned but have never reached such a high step in the ladder before. My duty is to trace the wanderings of the class of '77 who left our loved Alma Mater twelve strong, and as I far can hear, are still an unbroken band.

Alfred W. James, after many weeks of uncertainty as to how he should have his graduating suit made; what should be the shade of his tie; and the cut of his hair, secures his diploma and takes his first step in the business world, in Thomas Adamson's jewelry store where he remained for two years. Then changing employers, not employment, he worked for O. B. DeWolf one year and a half, when he brushed off the dust of Tecumseh and made Toledo his home, and traveled for a firm there until Feb. of the next year, when he accepted a position in a Cleveland house, traveling for them until Feb. of 1883, when he abandoned employers and commenced an installment jewelry business in room No. 4, Merrill Block, Detroit, where he invites his Alumni friends to visit him. He is not married, but I dare not tell why.

Miss Eunice Davidson returned to her country home, and took up the simple duties awaiting her there, she did not lay aside her school work but kept steadily on with her studies. During the long winter evenings she has added to her historical knowledge without the daily lessons from a teacher. She is at present studying German and Stenography and is a member of the C. L. S. C. of 1886.

Miss Mabel VanCamp, the first year after leaving school, clerked in her father's store in this place, and when her father removed to Sedalia, Missouri, she went with him and there devoted her time to the study of music. She sang in the church and gave lessons both in Sedalia and Warsaw. Later they moved to Chicago, where she gave her time to the study of vocal music, returning to Sedalia to sing in a concert. Her singing delighted her friends so much, that in order that she might pursue her studies under the best teachers they gave her a benefit concert. As a result of this she went to the Cincinnati College of Music, where she remained six months and then returned to Adrian, to rest her voice before continuing her studies.

Mrs. Rose VanVleet after graduating, taught two years and four months in the Primary department of our schools, and was promoted to fifth grade, where she finished the year. She then accepted an invitation to teach in Oxford, Michigan, where she remained one year and seven months, until failing health compelled her to abandon work. She was married to Mr. A. P. Groff of Oxford, in Aug., 1881, and has been engaged in the duties of her own home ever since. Her thoughts and best wishes have been with the Alumni although she has not met with us for four years.

Mr. Sumner Collins, in reply to my letter of inquiry as to his whereabouts since he left us, gives a negative account of himself in the following language. I am not adorning the Supreme Bench of our State, nor am I representing her at the courts of the "effete monarchies" of down-trodden Europe, and adds that while his principal occupation may be dodging creditors, still his name has not appeared on the rolls of those who work for the state at Jackson, or Ionia. But as I am to deal with facts I will give it as it is. He spent the first year in the High School at Ann Arbor, and entered the University in the fall of '78 as candidate for the degree of B. A. As he has not informed me of his marriage, I think he must have been accepted. He finished his course in Feb. 1882, and spent four months in the Weather Bureau at Washington. Returning to Michigan in Sept. 1882, beginning the study of law at Detroit in the office of G. V. N. Lothrop, our present Minister to Russia. He has since been admitted to the Bar and has an office at No. 55 Newberry & McMillan Building, where he says he is passing through the blissful starvation period of a "Brieffless Barrister." He has not forgotten his old class mates and would be glad to see them at any time.

Miss Jennie Frasier, after being instructed for so many years decided that instructing others would be her fort. She taught the first year after graduating and remained at home until Sept. of the next year, when she went to Concord, Michigan, to continue her chosen profession and was very successful. For the last two years she has been at Lake Linden, Mich., endeavoring to trim the shooting ideas of the youthful members of that town. Her invitation to remain another year goes to show that she has given satisfaction to her employers, but what her non-acceptance of that invitation shows, I am not prepared to say.

Harry H. Snell remained in Tecumseh for two years. In 1879 he left to accept a position in a lumber business in the Northern part of the State. As his object was to learn the business, he began in the woods twelve miles from civilization. Here he remained about five months working in a saw mill from day-light till darkness; his only recreation was sleep. At the end of five months he graduated from the woods and was placed on the yards where he finished his first year. He afterwards did office work at Greenville until 1881 when he went to Muskegon; there he remained until 1882, when being dissatisfied with his position he returned to Greenville. Since that time, or the past four years, he has been traveling in the capacity of a lumber salesman. His duties take him in fourteen different States. He still calls Tecumseh his home, and like most of the class of '77, is unmarried.

Miss Clara Waldron returned to her home and studied Domestic Economy for three years. Considering herself proficient in that art, she turned her attention to teaching. Her first summer was spent in the German District, Franklin, where she enjoyed the hospitality of each member of the district, or, in other words boarded around. She has filled the position of teacher in district No. 2, Frank in, in East Tecumseh, and later taught in the school where she first learned to read and write. Is now employed in District No. 5, Clinton.

I cannot give the history of Will D. Robbins better than he has given in his letter, hence, will read said letter. My history since graduation does not possess any magnificent and brilliant points so necessary to an interesting biography but is the simple story of a wanderer, remaining in no place long enough to establish himself either as an ornament or a scapegoat. Immediately after graduating in '77 I commenced work in the Tecumseh Herald office. Here I remained until the fall of '78, when I entered the University of Michigan. I pursued the classical course in this institution until the summer of '80, when I left my educational pursuits to enter into the sterner and severer struggle for a share of this world's bread. I came to Cleveland, my present home, and buried myself in the figures and accounts of the books of a jobbing jewelry house. I occupied my time in this way until the spring of '82, when longing for freer and fresher air, I started out for the west as travelling salesman for the same firm. I am still employed in the same capacity, although I have not come to be a giant amongst salesmen, when it comes to passing judgment on prune sass and hotel cookery in general, I am no dwarf.—Not married yet—no prospect of an alliance, but even under such disadvantages, I am enjoying an expensive appetite.

Fred B. Wood entered college at Ann Arbor in the fall of '75 where he remained until March '79, when he was compelled to abandon his studies on account of his eyes. He employed his time during the summer on a farm and in the fall of '79 had so far regained his health that he accepted a position as book keeper in Wm. McCowen's furniture store where he remained until August '80, when he again entered college in Ann Arbor in the Law department, from which he graduated in '84, when he commenced the practice of law with his father in this place. His father's death has left him alone in the office, where you will find him ever ready to settle all difficulties. He joined Co. C, Michigan State troops as private and has filled every office from corporal to captain, which position he now holds. One very important event in Mr. Wood's life he neglected to mention, and that was his marriage to Miss Louise Hialy, Feb. 22d, 1885, and as he is the only gentleman in the class that is married, I take the liberty to mention it.

There are two members of the class, Miss Gussie Burlingame and Miss Sadie Gamble, now Mrs. Charles Ives, that I have been unable to hear from.

Thus you perceive, Alumni, that the history of ten out of the class of '77, of the magical number twelve, has no startling points, but as the world is always better for faithfully performed labor, you can but conclude that when their career is ended the improvement will be marked.

Robert Stretch was at home on a flying visit last Tuesday.

DIED.

Died in Cambridge, on Friday night, June 27, 1885, Mrs. Jane Sheler, wife of George Sheler, at the ripe old age of 75 years, 3 mos., and 18 days.

She was the daughter of John Onsted and born in the county of Sussex, New Jersey, was married to Geo. Sheler in the fall of 1828. They came to Michigan in the spring of 1836. She has reared a family of ten children, all grown to man and womanhood and now living, except two daughters and one son, and are located around here in good and prospering circumstances, all of whom a parent may feel proud of. She has seen times when it was dark and gloomy, not knowing what the future would present, and after passing 57 years of wedded life has now left the partner of her choice at the age of 79 years to battle alone the few years that remain for him. She was a mother in every sense of the word, living for naught else but to look to their cares and wants. She has for the past number of years been an invalid, but never would give up her cares and toils of this life until a few days before her decease. The funeral was held at the Episcopal church on Sunday and was one of the largest congregations ever in town.

A MARVELOUS STORY
TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.
FROM THE SON: "28 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 25, 1882.
Gentlemen—My father resides at Clover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from neuralgia, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least ten years, but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.
Ayer's Sarsaparilla
Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."
FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of
Ayer's Sarsaparilla.
Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 21, 1882. Yours gratefully,
HIRAM PHILLIPS."
AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Sores, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.

KEEP IT PURE.
The Life is the Blood—Prevent Disease—Surgery the Last Resort A Telling Letter.
Here is a fact for you to think over, viz: Medical Science proves that diseases, no matter how great a variety they seem to have, proceed from comparatively few causes. It is for this reason that some single medicines relieve or cure so wide a range of complaints—some of them appearing almost directly opposite to their natures. When a medical preparation acts at once upon the digestive and urinary organs, and also purifies the blood, the list of difficulties subject to its control is astonishing. But while many things are said to possess this power, those which actually do exert it are very rare.
It is conceded that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y., is the most effective preparation now in use for all diseases arising from a foul or impure state of the circulation. Hence it is more than likely that if the writer of the following letter had habitually taken "Favorite Remedy" ten years ago, he would never have suffered from cancer.
PITTSFIELD, Mass., March 22, 1881.
Dr. David Kennedy,
Dear Sir—About six years ago I was obliged to resort to external treatment for the removal of a cancerous growth on my lip. On my return home I became sensible that my blood needed a thorough cleansing. My whole system too required toning up. While casting about for the best medicine to do this, your "FAVORITE REMEDY" was so highly recommended in my hearing that I resolved to try it. I did so and the result surprised me, it was effected so quickly and completely. I soon got over the depression produced by the operation and since the "Favorite Remedy," which I have continued to take in small doses, has kept me in such good health and strength as I never had before, nor expected to have. It is the best blood purifier in the world. I am sure of that. Yours, etc.,
MATTHEY FARRELL.

In all cases when a consultation is deemed desirable,
Address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.
But if you have not done so, adopt "FAVORITE REMEDY" as a household friend.

MALARIA.
As an anti-malarial medicine
DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S
has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5, by all druggists.

NOT A BLAMED WORD.

How the Tender Feelings of a Bright Young Man Were Trampled Upon By a Designing Young Woman.

The Auditor of State, hearing some one enter the room, looked up and beheld a man who looked as though he and melancholy had long been companions.

"Good morning," said the Auditor.

"Only tolerable."

He sat down and had, during a half hour, maintained an unbroken silence, when the Auditor said:

"Have you any business with me?"

"Not in particular."

Again he settled down into deep silence. The Auditor became impatient.

"What can I do for you?"

"Hah!"

"What cand do for you?" repeated the Auditor.

"Well, if you were in my place what would you do?"

"I don't know, I am sure."

"Haven't heard anything about me, then?"

"Nothing."

"Not a blamed word?"

"Not a word."

"Well, I'll tell you. I live out about twenty miles from here. I'm the feller that killed the big rattlesnake. Now, you have heard of me, haven't you?"

"No."

"Not a blamed word?"

"Not a word."

"That's strange. Well, some time ago I fell in love with Nat Pearson's daughter. You've heard of that, I reckon?"

"No."

"Not a blamed word?"

"Not a word."

"Well, Nat he wan't agin the affair."

"Wasn't eh?" said the Auditor, becoming amused.

"No. When I asked him he 'lowed that he didn't care, jes' so I wanted till he got through plantin' corn, for Sook—that's her name—can k'yer more corn with a hoe than any man in the neighborhood. I hadn't said anything to the girl all this time, thinkin' that I would wait. Well, when I spoke to her about it she 'lowed that it suited her well enough. Concluded to git married in town by a Justice of the Peace, so this mornin' we sot out an' come to town. I got my license an' bought her a lot of apples an' gatin' truck an' sweet stuff. I left her at the 'Squire's office while I went to the wagon yard after our horses, intendin' that as soon as we was married we would ride. Well, sir, when I came back she had dun married like Jacobs. You know him, don't you?"

"No."

"You've heard of him, haven't you?"

"No, never heard of him."

"Not a blamed word?"

"Not a word."

"Well, he is a little bit the ugliest an' good for nuthin' man I ever seed. The State of Arkansaw can't show up such another feller. Why, sir, he let Darb Andrews fling him down. You've hearn o' Darb?"

"No."

"Not a blamed word."

"Not a word?"

"Well now, if you was in my place what would you do?"

"I wouldn't do anything."

"Not a blamed thing?"

"No."

"I tell you, cap'n. It wan't so much that I love the girl, but that I need her."

"Need her, eh?"

"Yes. I've got ten acres of new ground that I want to put in corn. It is so rough that it can't be kivered 'cept with a hoe. That gal can k'yer it in three days. It's awful to be disappointed so early in life. Well, don't say anything about it."

"I won't."

"Not a blamed word?"

"Not a word."

"Well, good-bye. Grief has tuck possession of me."—Arkansaw Traveler.

The Turpitude of Church Choirs.

In no sphere of human effort is greater progress shown than in the pulpit. But, as we bear witness to the fact, a dull pang of regret abates our joy in contemplating the peccant of humors of church choirs.

The pews feel many a qualm of conscience under the fire of the pulpit. Sin cannot perk itself shame-faced on the cushion of repose in the highest seat in the synagogue. But who ever knew a church choir to cry peccavi? The theological sword thrusts at sinners in the pews and the a row of eloquence that fly over their heads never hit the choiristers. They tickle themselves with the straws of conceit. They wear an invisible coat of mail, and, under a barricade of hymn-books, eat sugar plums and crack jokes as if each in turn had slipped on the ring of Gyges. The man with bulging eyes and a bald head, who plays a fantasy on "Rock of Ages" on the cornet, fears no moral castigation from the pulpit for flirting with the soprano. He holds it at disadvantage. In mockery of the preacher's meek stare of reproof, he causes the diamond on his little finger to twinkle in his eyes, as if it had caught a ray of celestial light while triple-tonguing the last cadenza with an air of "sarcastico-benigant superiority." He knows it is not the sermon that draws, but the cornet.

While the organist is holding a suspicious tete-a-tete behind a sheet of music with a choir girl, who meets him half way with a fan of peacock-feathers, the tenor surreptitously writes a note on the fly-leaf of a hymn-book and pokes it in the contralto's muff. The moral torpor of the the basso, who sits with folded legs reading a Sunday newspaper, is a contemptuous comment on the evangelizing power of the pulpit. Then the second tenor is convulsed with a fit of laughter in watching a fly tickle the bald pate of a deacon below. It seems as if the Evil One had been metamorphosed into an insect, and was making a rival pulpit of the bare patch on the deacon's crown.

Usage has so consecrated the levities of church choirs, that missionaries must ever regard them as sterile fields for labor.

WAGONS AND ROADS.

Questions That Are Worthy of Careful Consideration by Farmers.

Questions connected with the draft of wagons and the resistance of muddy roads, are worthy of careful examination by the farmer who draws hundreds of tons of farm products to market annually, or an equal amount of manure over his land. The retarding influence of soft earth and mud on vehicles, when compared with the ease with which they are drawn on a hard smooth surface, is often much greater than those who merely drive and ride imagine. The resistance may be measured with considerable accuracy in the following manner: Place a loaded wagon on a hard, smooth road which has just enough descent for it to run down of its own weight. Ascertain with a level what this descent is. Suppose for example that it is only one foot in thirty; this will show that the friction or resistance of the surface of the road is only one-thirtieth of the weight; and if the loaded wagon weighs a ton, a force equal to one-thirtieth of a ton, or sixty-seven pounds, would be sufficient to move it on a level road of equal smoothness. Now apply this same reasoning to a deep muddy road-bed, where the wagon will not move unless the road has a descent of one foot in five. A force equal to one-fifth of a ton, or four hundred pounds, would be required to move it on a level road as muddy, or six times as much as on the smooth and hard surface. One horse on the good road would therefore draw as heavy a load as six horses on the muddy one.

The dynamometer gives rather more accurate results. Experiments have been made with this instrument, furnishing the following measurements of forces:

On a new gravel road, not yet hardened by use, a force equal to one-eighth of the weight of the wagon had to be applied to draw it. On the best hard earth road, one-twenty-fifth was found sufficient. On the best broken stone road, one-sixtieth; while on a railroad, a force of one ton would draw two hundred and eighty tons.

The resistance on rough roads was slightly diminished by steel springs on the wagon, at the same time that comfort to the horse and driver was increased, as well as safety to the harness and wagon. The firmness given to a road of broken stone by means of a solid paved foundation, was found to lessen the resistance about one-third.

The width of wagon wheels involves some questions which should be well understood. Wheels with broad tires on a farm wagon would pass over a cloddy surface and not sink into it, and would press the surface of pastures and new meadows without cutting it. Narrow wheels would not only cut and spoil the surface, but require a greater force of draught. The mud or soft earth would close on both sides of the rim, and load the wheels. Broad wheels are most useful on tracts of broken stone and gravel, rendering them smooth, hard and compact. Prof. Sanborn, of the Missouri Agricultural College, has made some tests by means of the dynamometer, with tire an inch and a half wide compared with a width of three inches. The wagon to which these different widths was attached was drawn over turf, and while the wide tire required a draught of only 310 pounds, the narrow tire with the same load could not be moved without a force of 439 pounds. The team which could draw a ton on the narrow wheels would move a ton and a half on the wide ones, the surface being of the character of turf. Professor Sanborn also ascertained that on a hard level road the same team would draw four times as much as over a soft wet road.

But these different results vary much with various conditions. If, for instance, there is an inch of soft mud on a hard surface beneath, the narrow tire would cut more easily through the mud than the wide one, as both would reach the hard surface, and the wide wheel would have to displace twice as much of the mud. All these and other conditions must be observed in practice.

If the great loss which is yearly sustained by those who have to drive ten or twenty miles daily, or three to six thousand miles annually, over bad roads, were more distinctly understood by the public generally, a greater interest would undoubtedly be felt in the importance of improving public and private roads as eminently a matter of economy.—Country Gentleman.

PLAIN DRESSES.

The Era of Simplicity in Dress Not Yet Come, but Coming.

One evidence of the return to simple styles is that salesmen suggest sixteen yards of plain silk for a dress, instead of twenty, as they did last spring. This smaller quantity can be used because there are fewer flounces and pleatings, and these are more scant than formerly, as many flounces are gathered and bias, and pleatings are not deeply lapped. The dress, however, which has no flounces or pleats except the depassant (or box-pleated frill at the foot of the false skirt) is the most economical dress and also the lightest weight for summer wear. Imagine this dress made of beige, bison cloth, mohair, striped wool or any other fabric sold at the popular prices of sixty-five or seventy-five cents a yard! The false skirt can be of alpaca of the same color with a depassant three inches wide at the foot. The wool goods, crinoline lined and set on this lining quite plain, may extend higher on the sides or in front, or wherever the drapery is caught up highest. The apron has curved wrinkles from the right side down and falls in folds on the left. The back has the pleated pointed over-skirt already noted. The basque, of the simplest shape, must be given an air of style by a high officer's collar covered with velvet or with rows of braid, and the cuffs should match; then a vest of the same trimming only two inches wide should be set down the front, between two rows of buttons and button-holes. If a polonaise suit is preferred, the skirt may be quite plain, and the polonaise have short curved paniers in front with long full breadths that cover the entire back.—Harper's Bazar.

ANIMAL LANGUAGE.

The Power of Communication Between Animals a Cultivable Power.

This subject of animal language interests me more and more, for I find it is not merely a power they have, but a very cultivable power. If you will talk with the creatures in your barn-yard, they soon get not only to understand your general meaning, but to reply with modifications of sound that are meant for you in particular. One or two hens in a flock will show particular aptitude in telling you what they think. Some horses have, or can have, an octave of sounds and express very nice gradations of dislike and pleasure, even up to very defined laughter. Other animals laugh, notably birds, with articulate sounds. Some years since I owned a horse, with which I undertook to drive to a neighboring town over the hills in winter. A spot of hidden ice suddenly tripped her, and for a time it was impossible for her to get up. But by efforts that entirely exhausted me I finally got her on foot again. She never forgot it. But my approach to the stable was invariably welcomed by cordial neighs, and that not sufficing, she would put her head affectionately on my shoulder or under my arm. On another occasion a pet Morgan called me, while I was engaged fifty rods from the barn, with loud and persistent calls that I instantly understood meant trouble. Going hastily to the stables, I found the cows had broken down a door and were having a big frolic where they were capable of doing mischief. As soon as I approached the horse gave a satisfied whinny, followed by a long sigh of relief, and went to eating quietly.

But for real vocalization the fowls surpass both animals and birds. I have had one rooster that had a remarkable power of laughing. No one could possibly hear him without doing as he would when Gough laughs—laugh with him. Now, a dog has a diffused laugh all over, but especially concentrates a chuckle in his tail. The dog's tail is the most cultured tail among animals. It not only laughs, but it talks. The tail of a cow has no more sense than an ox-gad, and a horse's tail is not much wiser. They even lash flies in a loose way that shows they don't know, except in a general way, where the fly is.

The rooster's tail belongs to the ornamental class. The gobbler manages to make himself very ridiculous with his. But I shall write an essay on tails some day. The point now is that my rooster didn't laugh with his tail, but with his throat. He invariably met me as I approached the barn, and, calling his hens, marched ahead of all to the feeding place, with a chuckle that would break out into occasional downright ripples of laughter that set every one who heard him into doing the same thing. So off we marched as jolly as a crew of college boys on the way to a class supper. Laughter is catching, and I always found myself hilarious at chore time as long as Dan was alive. Dan was a Leghorn and Hamburg cross, but his flock was mostly Brahma, and most unsuitable for mothers. It became necessary, when I wished to set eggs, to borrow a smaller hen of a neighbor. Among those that were kindly loaned for this purpose was one little black topknot of no special breed; one of those independent creatures that care little for ancestry and haven't any very settled ways. She was just a spry, honest, bright little Biddy. She understood setting to a dot, got off at the right time; went back in season; turned over her eggs; stepped carefully among them; never got excited, and was all in all a commendable bird. Now a Plymouth Rock always wants to set, but knows no more about it than my brother John, who was caught brooding a nest in a corner of the mow on a time. Neither does a Brahma understand it. She is too fat, and her blubber rolls the eggs in and breaks them; and when she gets tired she sits flat down, seven pounds avoirdupois, on the brittle shells and gets up every day with a week-old chicken sticking to her feathers. A Leghorn has no patience; will sit for a couple of weeks and then quit. If you want a model mother, get a brown game or one of my black topknots.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SUMMER HOMES.

Pleasant and Pretty Fashions for Summer Resorts.

Umbrella stands are useful, but every one knows that if umbrellas are kept in them long they get very dusty, even with great care. A nice case for this use in a sea-side or summer cottage anywhere is made of crash or linen, or any wash material. They can be made to hold one or two umbrellas and are shaped like a dagger, the outer piece is cut rather larger and is not so long at the top as under the side. The upper piece is embroidered in outline-stitch with crewels—an umbrella, or a long slender spray of flowers make a pretty finish, or if preferred some comic design, a chimney-sweep appearing from the top of a chimney with his brushes. Another very sensible design for country use, for lounge or hammock, is a sofa pillow covered with brown linen, merely a brown linen pillow-case, a bunch of red poppies worked in crewels on one side, and tied around the top with a broad red ribbon, making one of the bag pillows so fashionable at present. This of course can be laundered when soiled. A nice shoe bag is made of chintz or cretonne, about three-fourths of a yard long and a little less than half a yard wide, two rows of cretonne as wide as desired are then tacked on this foundation, in four box-plaits each, between each plait is stitched a stripe of red or blue worsted braid and the whole is bound with the same. These may be tacked on closet or wardrobe doors, and are found very convenient when one is limited for closet room. Many ladies who board in summer carry all these conveniences with them—not only for their usefulness but they give a home-like look to the usually rather bare rooms of the ordinary country hotel or boarding-house. Something pretty and appropriate for a napkin for a fish platter is three fishes in outline-stitch in red crewel, outside, or rather over these, in fine twine-colored crewel is netted a miniature seine.—Demorest's Monthly.

DANDY HOTEL GUESTS.

A Veteran Clerk Tells of a Few Encounters he Has Had.

"Who was the most admirable guest I ever came across in my career behind hotel counters?" asked George Fuller, clerk of the Russell House, replying to a question.

"Yes, that's about it."

"Well," said the clerk, "I have in the course of my experience, met several rather noted traveling men. Now, when I was day clerk of the Hamehameha House in Honolulu——"

"Here, come off on that."

"Do you want to hear my story or not, young fellow?"

"Yes, of course."

"Well, then, don't make any unnecessary comments. Now, to proceed. When I was clerk of the house there arrived a very high-toned Kanaka from Waui in the Hawaii Island. He came over in a little boat. He wore a plug, and nothing else to speak of except some highly-interesting flesh-tint illustrations. He engrossed his name on the register. I gave him a check for his grip, took his overcoat—you see they have no bell boys in the hotels of Hawaii."

"Ain't you getting a little tangled up?"

"I should curl my mustache that I wasn't. We ought to have had bell boys, but we didn't."

"I didn't mean that. I simply desired to intimate that saying the fellow was naked and had an overcoat in the same breath is rather suggestive of inconsistency."

"Well, are you telling this story?"

"No, but—"

"Very well, then, you keep still and take a reef in your jaw, while I proceed. He asked: 'What's the price of your finest room, first floor, front, with bath?' I told him, and I gave him a figure high enough to buy the ransom of Kalakua. He planked down two weeks' pay at this figure all in crisp, brand new United States greenbacks—"

"New greenbacks in the Sandwich Islands? Now, George—"

"Shut up! You're listening. I'm telling the story. I was a little paralyzed already, but when he asked for the 'worst room in the house' I was simply killed dead. The fellow said, 'I know I'll get it, anyway, so I asked for it. You can charge the figure you have specified, however.' He flew very high while while he stayed. We fondled him too, you bet, for he was altogether the flushest guest we had had in months. But when he left—it makes me kick myself yet to even think of it—we discovered that the money he had paid was counterfeit!"

"He was a good deal of a dandy, wasn't he?"

"Quite, but he couldn't compare with a lady boarder that I had with me when I clerked in the Alexandrovitch Kotzebue House in Sitka in 1864—that was before America invested in Alaska. She drove up one afternoon in a phaeton drawn by four white horses—"

"Here, here. I can't stand everything!"

"Well, it's for you to hear—you're right. But quit your chinning and listen. She alighted rather grandly and greeted me smilingly. She ordered the whole first floor assigned to her and I consulted the propretor, and we laid ourselves out to accommodate our distinguished guest. She said she was the Countess Rolcaczy, whose husband had been appointed by the Imperial Government Governor of Russian-America. He would arrive by the next Pacific steamer from Petropaulovski, Kamschatka, where he was located. The commandant at Sitka gave in his allegiance all right and for a time the Countess reigned in great shape. Everything went swimmingly until she began to get large advances on credit from all the Sitka banks—"

"Banks? This is too much."

"Will you quit interrupting? We thought it was a little queer that she did not offer to pay us some portion of her very large hotel bill. One night the Countess disappeared, and she left a great deal ahead of Sitka. I was discharged next week for not having detected her as a fraud at first sight."

"Who was she?"

"A milliner—named Smith—from San Francisco."

"But these cases are of rank swindlers. I can't see that they were admirable guests. I mean guests that delighted your soul."

"When I leased the Hotel de l'Empereur Napoleon on St. Helena, I gave a Brazilian nobleman an inside room, four floors up near the kitchen, and he never kicked. He was a darling. Then again when I kept the 'End of the World' at Cape Horn, my only guests were Argentine and Chilian, Generals who were 'holding' Terra del Fuego for their respective powers. Grub got a little short. You know Port Famine is in that region, and we had to feed the boys once in awhile on soup made from able-bodied Fuegians. The Generals entered no protest. When I clerked in the 'Geyser' at the base of Mt. Hecla in Iceland—"

"That settles it. You yank the belt away from Ananias in the greatest kind of shape."

And the clerk's victim made his escape, with something about the "Grand Llama's Delight" at Lassa in Thibet and the virtues of a Buddhist priest who stopped there ringing in his ears as a parting shot.—Detroit Free Press.

—John C. Pillisbury, ex-Warden of the New Hampshire State Prison, who died on Wednesday at the age of eighty-three, belonged to a most remarkable family of prison officials, his father, two brothers, two sons and a brother-in-law having served as Wardens of State Prisons. His father was the first Warden of the New Hampshire Prison, and his brother-in-law, Walker, was killed by a prisoner while Warden of the prison at Charlestown, Mass.—Boston Journal.

TREE PLANTING.

A Subject That Can Not Be Too Often Dwelt Upon.

Much as has been said and written of late about the planting of trees and the restoration of woods and forests, it has not been too much, nor indeed quite enough. It is a subject that grows with thinking and discussing it. The chief trouble is that it has been neglected. Up to the present generation's coming upon the stage, the work with trees and forests has been one of destruction; the object has been to get rid of them and make room for open cultivation. And as it is always a much more contagious business to destroy than to build up, the work of destruction has proceeded at a greatly faster pace than is likely to be the case with the work of reconstruction. To recover the losses by damage which threaten us on every side, the time must needs be sharply improved at first and the plans must be pursued with all the concentration of energy possible. There is not only a great deal to be done, but from necessity a great deal of it must be done all together. This fact, however, is not one to cause discouragement. We may rather accept it as a fortunate stimulus to action which is to make final recovery more easy and rapid.

There is not a farmer within reach of a written or spoken view of this subject who can not be made to see, if at all inclined, what a practical benefit and increased value the planting of trees is to impart to his acres. The result is sure to show more and more with every year. He thus succeeds in securing a reliable supply for his springs and their feeding capacity for his family and stock. Additional moisture is retained in lands now inclined to suffer from drought. He gets inviting areas of shade for cattle and sheep, and thereby increased their comfort, health and value. The sharp north winds are sifted through his plantations in winter, and are sprinkled and sprayed over the pastures and meadows and orchards they shelter, instead of pouring directly over them in almost icy torrents and threatening the tender roots of grass and the shellac-coated fruit buds on the trees with sharp and shriveling destruction. To crown all, a farm and a homestead are made picturesque, inviting and beautiful in the eyes of its occupant and cultivator as well as in the eyes of others, and consequently possesses an increased marketable value, when ornamented with useful plantations and set off with trees, which are the glory of known vegetable growths.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

THE NEW BULL.

How the Addition to the Farmer's Herd Should Be Treated.

At this time when many of our readers attending the various cattle sales, may become the purchaser of young bulls, a word of caution in regard to their treatment may not come amiss, especially to those whose experience in handling bulls may be limited. It should not be forgotten in estimating the importance of this subject that if you make a wrong start with your newly acquired bull, his usefulness to you will not only be seriously impaired, but you may obliged to part with him altogether at a serious loss. An unmanageable bull is a most undesirable possession, and many a young bull is made so by mistaking playfulness, or nervousness as the case may be, for vice or temper. The effect of traveling on the young animal that has never been off his native soil, must be considered, and when, as is often the case, he has been obliged to travel by cars to the place of sale, where he is kept some time amid strange surroundings, and is then excited by the sale itself, the ring surrounded by strange faces into which he often has to be driven with more or less roughness, according to the disposition and temper of his attendant, and finally takes another unaccustomed journey by steam cars to his new home, some allowance must be made for undue nervousness and excitement. If he is not already rung, as he probably will have been if old enough, before the sale, let that operation be performed as early as may be, the control thus afforded being a great assistance in handling him judiciously. Do not put him into solitary confinement, but fasten him securely in the stable or barn where he will see other cattle, and frequently be the recipient of a friendly patting and soothing words. Do not let him be approached by too many strangers, but put him as much as possible in charge of one person, preferably, of course, that one who, it is intended, shall have the chief care of him in the future; let this person bring him his food and exercise him, and in every way possible get him used to his new surroundings. Let misbehavior be promptly punished, but never continue his punishment when he ceases his misbehavior. Grooming with a stiff brush has been recommended as a sure way to the bull's favor.—National Live Stock Journal.

—The gypsies are averse to alliances outside of their own race, and when one of their young women married the Englishman Isaac Jowles, who afterward was known as king of the gypsies, her two daughters, very beautiful girls, refused to be married except to gypsy men. Their children were in every respect like gypsies; the introduction of alien blood seemed to have no appreciable effect.—N. Y. Tribune.

—When a lady condescends to a practical joke it generally is a very neat one. M. Boncourt, the rich financier, was very stingy to his wife in the matter of pin money. One day a lady, closely veiled and very anxious not to be recognized, called upon him and borrowed a large sum, leaving her diamonds as a pledge. It was his wife.—Brooklyn Eagle.

—Stiff cuffs: If you do not want shirt cuffs to blister and wrinkle when buttoned do not make the first, or boiled starch, too stiff and rub it in well. Of course you know that they should always be dipped in cold starch, i. e. clear starch mixed thin with cold water before ironing.—Boston Budget.

Happy Thought in the Night.

For years Mr. Jas. R. Ackley, of 163 West Fayette street, Baltimore, had suffered with neuralgia so that he could hardly sleep. But he writes, "One night I was suffering very much and the thought struck me that Brown's Iron Bitters would do me some good, and perhaps cure me. It was a happy thought, and to my great joy it has entirely cured me after using two bottles. After three months I have have had no return of the symptoms. I cheerfully recommend it as the best tonic I have ever used." Neuralgia suffers, take the hint!

efforts for his own advantage. If wages are kept up so as to take away the profits of industry, manufactures will cease to be carried on and instead of receiving greater wages, many workingmen would no doubt be thrown out of employment altogether. A third argument adduced in favor of this law is that by increasing the wealth of laborers they will be enabled to purchase more goods and an impulse will thus be given to industry. This argument looks at only one side of the matter. To the employer the increase in business would be counterbalanced by increase of cost in carrying on the production and to the laborer the increase in wages would be more than counterbalanced by the increased cost of living. For a rise in wages would quickly bring about a rise in prices of other things.

Let us now consider some direct arguments against such laws. It is not within the proper bounds of governmental power to fix wages or determine the number of hours which shall constitute a day's work. Each of these should be determined by those directly concerned, the employer and the laborer. It is usually conceded that a person should know more about his own business than about an other's, and this also holds true with the government for its paternal power yet has been able to deal successfully with private affairs. In the reign of Henry VII., the English Parliament passed a law determining the limits of wages but it was soon found that wages were governed by a law more potent than any which Parliament could frame—the law of supply and demand. The labor market, if left open to competition, pays a premium upon extraordinary skill and thus offers inducements for laborers to improve their abilities but if government interferes, these motives would be taken away and the tendency would be for skilled labor to decrease. If a laboring man wishes to work ten hours a day is it a just law which forbids his working more than eight? On the other hand, if a capitalist can hire a certain piece of work done for one dollar, is it a just law which compels him to pay more? Any legislation which has for its object the bolstering up of one person, or class of persons at the expense of an other, is contrary to the genius of our institutions, the fundamental principle of which is that no man shall obtain by law any advantage in the race of life on account of birth, rank of occupation, or any fictitious privilege of any kind whatever. On the other hand the hindrances and stumbling blocks which come from circumstances of family or occupation are removed as far as the law can remove them. Where is the man who questions this relation of the individual to society. And why, we ask, was this principle made the corner stone of our system? Because it was believed that in this way society makes the most of its members. Some men have more in them than others, but who knows which is which until they have proven it? We believe that the best way for each to develop himself and improve his individual condition is for society to place them all on their feet and then let each run for himself. It has been truly said that whatever is done for men or classes, to a certain extent, takes away the stimulus and necessity of doing for themselves. The inevitable tendency of such a course is to make them comparatively helpless. They must of necessity lose some of their self respect when they voluntarily admit that they are not capable of managing their own affairs. Must we conclude then that the government can do nothing to improve the condition of the laborer? Certainly not. Indirectly the laborer may be benefitted in many ways. Of all the legislation which may justly be carried out with a view to the benefit of the laboring man undoubtedly, that legislation is the most potent for good which gives to him the advantages of an education. Well has it been said that the future welfare, nay more, the very existence of this nation depends upon the education of her citizens. The part of the government in this regard has been well carried out; school houses are scattered everywhere throughout the land and their doors are open to all alike. There are also public libraries full of instructive books and free to all. The government can and does furnish means for advancement but the individual must build up his own character and it depends upon his own will and energy what that character shall be. He must take advantage of the opportunities offered to educate himself, and above all he must learn to rely upon himself and to understand that his advancement can only be effected by means of individual action, economy, and self-denial, by better habits rather than by greater rights.

Defense of Xanthippe.

BY MABEL HAYDEN.

"My brother Cimeon used to say," said Elpinice, "new times are evil times, the world goes on in its course and ambitious men urge it forward." But we women are here too. Give heed Telsippe and let what I say to you be enough for to-day, if we women hold together and cling to the wheels, they wont succeed speedily in turning this earth completely out of the old grooves."

I have not come this evening to bury Xanthippe, but to praise her. As Marc Anthony says, "the evil men do lives after them, the good is too oft interred with their bones," but let us not have it so with Xanthippe. The learned Socrates thought her very peevish, and perhaps he ought to have known; still under leave of Socrates and the rest, have I come to speak in Xanthippe's behalf. You all know Xanthippe was the wife of that philosopher and moralist Socrates, but all that is recorded of her is that she was the daughter of an undistinguished pleblian, and considered a regular conjugal scold; but to night I will try to prove if she was fretful and irritable she had ample cause. It may be well to give a brief sketch of the life in Athens, at this time, about 436 B. C. This city reached its highest excellence, agricultural and mechanical, under the sway of Pericles, who was ruler during the career of Socrates. The people were divided into two classes, freemen and slaves. In Sparta the latter performed all mechanical, agricultural, and menial labor, the former devoted their time to war and politics. But in Athens they engaged in agriculture as well. And what were the arrangements? Ordinarily, the men found pleasure conversing, or in listening to orators, attending the disputations of philosophers in the market places, walking in the public gardens, and taking part in processions and festivities in honor of the Grecian gods. But the women were seldom allowed to participate in these pleasures, and never unattended. So, doubtless, at such times Xanthippe was alone, and spinning, for like other Grecian ladies she was not allowed to meet strangers, and was kept in a remote part of the house, baking bread, weaving, and superintending the household affairs. Indeed, they were not supreme even in their own households, for the husbands carried the keys, and did the marketing. In war-times the men might have been seen bargaining for butter and eggs, and bringing meat or vegetables home in their brazen helmets. The education of the youth was of great importance but the Grecian maiden was taught little or nothing. In the sciences the Romans surpassed the Greeks, but this latter were far superior in the fine arts. Here mythology, formed on imagination, was a beautiful, though in some respects, a fearful dream. In it, allegory and true history were combined, and though founded neither upon reason, nor revelation, yet it shadowed forth sublime truths in dark, mysterious images. It must be admitted however, in the divinities of this people the physical was much more prominent than the moral, and it seems impossible that sages, moralists, and persons of cultured intellect who lived in Greece, could have had faith in such a mythology, and furthermore it is known that Socrates and a few others of the wisest men of antiquity rejected the popular belief, and observing the unity of design, apparent in all the works of nature, concluded the whole universe to have been created by one omnipotent. Socrates, the husband of my defendant, and the son of Sophroniscus, for some time followed the occupation of his father who was a sculptor; but being such a seeker after knowledge, philosophy became his study, and his chief theory was, "the greatest study of mankind is man." Some writer has said of him, "He brought down Philosophy from the clouds and made her converse with man. He was employed in investigating the nature of good and evil, happiness and misery. He was always in a labyrinth of feelings from which he could find no exit, and in which he was constantly being brought to the same starting point. Always rambling on starry nights, thinking, watching, seeking knowledge, in vain; and if he ever found truth he always rejected it. Because of this continual questioning we might think of him as a huge, ungainly interrogation point, for physically, he was very ugly, with thick lips, a flat nose, prominent eyes, bald pate and loose gait. When once reminded he was a Greek, Socrates replied—"A Greek? Am I not too ugly to be a Greek? My snub nose does not belong to the pure lineaments of my race. I shall make necessity a virtue, and seek a life compatible with uglyness." His constitution was robust and wonderfully enduring. In the winter he would wear scanty clothing, even going about bare footed. Yes, that is true! Xanthippe would have fewer stockings to darn in consequence. Socrates contracted his wants to the least degree possible, nearly starving himself and his wife, ever saying, "To want nothing, belongs to the gods. To want little, is a near approach to divine nature." Although his early life was humble, he became one of the best known men in Athens. 1st. Because he made oral instruction his business, teaching without fee or reward. 2d. He taught not merely to impart knowledge, but also to gain for himself clearer ideas. He was discontented, sarcastic, meditative, and under the impression that he was entrusted with a divine mission. A friend of his, on being told the "questioner" had chosen a "partner for life," exclaimed, "Socrates married! He sought truth, but found a wife!" Perhaps that is no uncommon occurrence now-a days. When Socrates was asked about his wife's disposition, he answered, "Oh! Yes! She is a great scold, but that is what I need for self-dicipline," therefore, with woman's keen perception, Xanthippe adapted her temper to his needs as any loving wife does what her judgment dictates for her husband's good, administering the domestic lumps of sugar, or doses of vinegar, each in its proper time. Shortly after the young couple had commenced housekeeping several friends of the sage were about to pay him a visit. Naturally, Xanthippe worried about the cooking, and that she could not suitably entertain. The company had come and gone, and all things had run smoothly, till one of the guests, the youthful Alcibiades, for the sole purpose of annoying her, sent her a heavy cake. Xanthippe appreciated the insult, but Socrates showed what indifference he paid the delicacy of his wife's sensibilities by simply asking, "What of it?" His absent-mindedness was another trait to irritate one. He would frequently be asked to do some trivial errand, and would forget everytime, for what he had been sent, bringing home to Xanthippe leeks if she sent for lamp wicks. It is said, when he was a stone cutter, he would steadily carve away at his marble for half a day, then dropping his tools would sit for an hour idly staring into space. Quite likely, some such fit would overtake him while carving a roast, and think how exasperating it would be for poor Xanthippe to have to sit patiently waiting for him to recover his senses sufficiently to serve her before everything grew cold. Often Socrates would stop at the house of a friend and find it in confusion, no fires, the supper cold, the children cross, and the room in disorder; but it was all right, everything perfectly comfortable, no apologies necessary. Upon his return home where his poor wife has been toiling from morning till night, he cannot see why his house is ever out of order, the children fretting, and everywhere such discomfort. Here no apologies are accepted. Socrates could not look upon the sunny side of the clouds at home. The house in which Xanthippe dwelt was very inferior, built of unbaked bricks and exceedingly rough in structure. The barn was directly in front, and pigs were ever rooting about the front door, though hens being her pets, were allowed the freedom of the house. Socrates would spend but little of his time at home, and was always out late evenings, leaving his wife to worry and wonder as to his whereabouts. Is it strange that an angry wife would frequently greet him at the threshold with, "Now, really! Socrates, it is quite too bad! I have had so much to put up with, and you must stay away all the evening, of course, leaving me to care for everything. The children have been unusually saucy and up to all sorts of mischief. Our youngest tore his clothes this morning in climbing the bay tree, so I had to put him to bed in order to mend them. I found the moths had eaten holes in my best woolen tunic, and the hens had pecked much of the yarn on the looms. It is a provoking shame that you loiter about the market-place the livelong day, instead of remaining at home to talk to me occasionally." He would turn her off with some question as, "What is love? Tell me, wife, what is the nature of that state of feelings we call love?" She would reply, "What is love, indeed! I think you would display a little more real affection by helping me discipline the children, instead of setting a bad example by your loafing and your negligence. You would be more loving if you provided better for your family." Then would Socrates say, "Xanthippe, the very best woman in this world is she who talks the least." You say if she would talk about things more interesting to himself her husband would be less indifferent to words her. She was unable to converse with him, for the Athenian ladies were uneducated, and given no freedom; they were not posted on everyday happenings in the outer world; they could not exert upon life and on the world a counter influence with the ennobling liberty of the feminine soul; woman's intellect was not allowed to exert upon the world an equal influence with man's. And men do not realize that the wife and mother conducts a restaurant, laundry, library, university and clothing store, and is health officer and justice of peace in her home. Suppose you had a husband so gloomy, careless, discontented, sarcastic, meditative, and undemonstrative. Suppose you had to be shut up indoors, plodding the daily routine with nothing to brighten life. Suppose your husband should come home with glowing descriptions of the charms and cooking of some Asphasia! Suppose when you are completely worn out, after a busy Saturday, or blue Monday, so tired you can't even get out of your own way, your husband should propound riddle after riddle, when you want to be left alone. Suppose you were not allowed to rule supreme at your own fireside. Suppose you had to hear quoted continually that long worn out maxim, "O woman, woman's fairest ornament is silence!" Would you not fret and scold, become jealous, tired and irritable? Perhaps these troubles when taken singly are trifling, but taking them as a whole they are overwhelming and Xanthippe's entire life was a long record of such miseries. To be sure if we were all cast in a heroic mold we should despise aggravations, so petty; but this world does not turn on heroic principles. It is useless to tell a weary housewife her trials are absurd. "Absurd?" Her own common sense has told her so, and that is why it is so aggravating. It is equally useless to remind these sufferers if they lived with a proper regard for the present and future they could bear these vexations with a calm proper philosophy, for these same philosophers are often strongly moved by disappointments in meals and in the weather, and for want of buttons, and Socrates, who pretended to despise little troubles, was quite apt to exaggerate them. But I will now leave the case in your hands, earnestly hoping, hereafter, Xanthippe may be less harshly judged, and that Socrates himself may share part of the blame heaped upon her.

Journalism.

BY WILL H. HAYDEN.

Journalism in the United States has been born and reared within the last two hundred years, but already it has gained an eminence unsurpassed by any modern invention. It is to-day the greatest agency for good or evil, and our journalists far more than our statesmen are the guides, if not the creators, of public opinion. This profession far more than any other has been the great promoter of civilization in the United States. Still this is not an American invention. We cannot claim the honor of having invented or of having done the first printing, or even of having published the first newspaper. But we can claim for our countrymen the honor of having made journalism what it now is, and of giving to it its present scope and influence. The first newspapers in the United States were published in the latter part of the 17th century. They contained nothing of interest, for there was but little occurring in the colonies at that time to interest the public. But notwithstanding the fact that they were perfectly harmless they were immediately suppressed by the officers of the crown, who regarded them as breeders of sedition. The first American newspaper that continued for any length of time was the Boston News Letter, the first issue of which appeared April 24, 1704. It was published by John Campbell and was a two-column sheet, 10x8 inches. This continued to be issued weekly until 1776, and was followed by the New England Courant, edited by Jas. Franklin. Franklin however soon incurred the displeasure of the English officials, and was informed that his editorial career had ended. But the paper immediately came out with Benjamin's name as editor, and thus it was continued. The tyrannical course of the government gradually alienated the colonists, and her power began to wane. The people began to clamor for a more republican form of government. Political questions were enthusiastically debated on both sides, and the newspapers were drawn into the controversy. Finally, on the breaking out of the Revolution, dawned a new era in the history of American journalism. The press threw off the chains by which it had been bound, and entered upon a career of independence, power and influence which it has ever since retained. It held before the minds of the people, already greatly excited, the dark side of kingcraft, and taught the broadest doctrines of republicanism. The chief organ of republicanism during the struggle for independence was the Boston Gazette. To its office flocked all the great revolutionary writers as by natural instinct. Its opponent was published in New York, and was very bitter in its attacks on the then so called rebels. But on the successful termination of the Revolution this paper had to close its doors, as did all others whose columns were devoted to the Tory cause. After the close of the war and during the exciting times which preceded the adoption of the Constitution, The Federalist, edited by Madison, Hamilton & Jay, rendered the most powerful influence. All the various advantages and objections to the Constitution were discussed in its columns. It urged the necessity of union among all classes, and by its influence more than anything else was brought about the adoption of the Constitution. From this time on, as our country entered upon its career of advancement and prosperity, unrivalled in the history of nations, with all that attends a great and prosperous career, journalism has kept an even pace. But it has been within the last fifty years that the press has undergone the greatest transformation and experienced the deepest inspiration of its whole history. During this time those journals, such as the New-York Evening Post, Sun, Tribune and Herald, were gradually gaining that prominence in the newspaper world which they now enjoy. During this period also began that host of local journals, springing up as it were all over the country, until to-day there is scarcely a village or hamlet that does not boast of one or more newspapers. By the census of 1880 we find that there are now published in the United States a total of 11,000 newspapers, with an annual circulation reaching into the billions. And thanks to the steam press and the electric telegraph, the readers of the great American journals are made familiar with the affairs of our own and foreign nations within twenty-four hours from their occurrence. Every mail brings to us the daily newspaper. It is hastily read and destroyed. How many ever thought of its influence for good or evil and its value to the people as a faithful chronicler of events. So rapid has been the growth of the press that its influence is probably but imperfectly understood even by those who have the most to do with it. The newspaper has gradually become the vehicle of the world's thoughts. It is no longer a simple record of events. It occupies itself with the thought and spirit of the times, the discoveries of science and the treasures of literature. In a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people" it is of the utmost importance that the masses be enlightened, in order that they may be competent to decide intelligently all questions submitted to their decision. And it is from the newspaper that we obtain the greater part of our knowledge of all the great issues of the day. From what other source can we look for such general knowledge as from the newspapers? One may go through college, become skilled in classics, mathematics and sciences, but what does he know of labor and capital, of the regulations of commerce, or the policy of government in general—questions that he will meet with in public life. Furthermore, a man of business cannot afford to spend any large part of his time in reading wordy accounts of events, or merely speculative articles on the great questions of the day, but he requires a clear, concise and truthful statement of facts. His own reason will assist him in judging the case. Of course everything in the newspapers is not to be taken as standard, for their aim however high is liable to be perverted. In this as in all professions are to be found unscrupulous and designing men, who do not hesitate to use their columns to advance their own selfish ends, while making professions of public virtue. Of course the editor will use his influence in the direction of his convictions, and thus he may render important service to the country by keeping the people informed of the policy of each party. So far the editor should receive the support of all, but when he forgets his place and devotes his columns to scurrilous attacks upon persons and measures, it is time he handed the keys of his office to the officers appointed to suppress all nuisances. But such journals soon forfeit their influence by their falsity for at heart men love the truth. Notwithstanding the low tone of many journals having a great circulation in our country to-day, we believe the moral and intellectual standard of the newspaper is gradually advancing. Every year it becomes more difficult to buy the influential newspaper. They are becoming to a great extent pecuniarily independent of their subscribers, and they no longer consider it their highest duty to conform strictly to the opinions of their readers. Their aim is to lead, rather than to be led. Every year brings more and more men of the highest intelligence to the field of journalism, and to this fact we think we must attribute the wonderful power and influence of the press. And with its power and influence have grown its responsibilities, as has been said—"That which began in the Royal Gazette simply to proclaim the edicts of the king, has in this country become the great record of the will and wish of the fifty millions of sovereigns who govern the land." "The press of America is its hope, its prophet and its guardian."

Cabals.

BY FRANK H. HALL.

During the latter part of the 17th century the English people were just recovering from the effects of a religious excitement, which in its intensity and severity had almost reached fanaticism. An always deep religious feeling, now strengthened by the follies of their king and a great concern in the affairs of government, troubled by their ruler's lack of executive ability, had led to a religious uprising, to the overthrow of the king's power, his execution, and the establishment of the government known as the Commonwealth of England. At the head of affairs, with the title of Lord Protector, was Oliver Cromwell, a man of iron will, trained in a rough school, having strong religious convictions, and but little respect for the belief of others. Associated with him were men of like character, actuated by the same motives and principles, and wholly under his control. These men believed that their religion called upon them to forsake all pleasure, to check the expression of their most natural feelings, and to look only upon the most serious side of life. Upon such principles as these the new government was founded and kept up for several years. The people were deprived of their amusements and sports, their inclinations and desires kept under severe restraint, and they obliged to live by the strictest rules and laws. The masses were content with this state of affairs for but a short time. Even under Cromwell's protectorate they began to murmur and complain of the narrowness of this view of life and when his strong hand relaxed in death they soon threw off their restraint, and gladly welcomed the returning son of their old king. Led by his example and influence the nation lapsed into a state of pleasure, thoughtless enjoyment and sensuality. The seriousness of the preceding decade disappeared as by magic, while there began a period in which thoughts of mere personal gratification displaced interest in good government and national prosperity. From these causes it happened that when Charles II collected as his advisers some of the worst men in the kingdom, the people were prepared to make little resistance. Charles was naturally a dissolute and thoughtless youth, and he carried the same characteristics with him when he assumed the crown. Caring but little for anything but his own enjoyment and the accomplishment of selfish desires and objects, he gathered what best suited these purposes. His chief advisers were Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington and Lauderdale. The initials of their name spelled the word c-a-b-a-l, and their connection with the term gave it a significance which it still retains. At first these advisers pleased the people by advocating popular measures and by catering to their love of pleasure and enjoyment. Then, feeling that they had quieted opposition and that they would meet little resistance, they used their positions and influence for their own benefit and advancement. Thus they gained more and more power, controlling both government and people till their rule was almost complete. But at length, as they became bolder and more exacting, a change in sentiment took place. They were forced from their high positions, and lost their power. In the course of this Cabal we see the strength which is gained by concerted planning and acting, and the influence a few may exert upon many. In this case the influence was for the worse, and thus the word Cabal usually implies that those to whom it is applied are organized for a sinister purpose. In its original use the word had no such signification, but meant simply a confederation of men for the furtherance of a common interest. In its broad sense the term might well be applied to many organizations little thought of under that name. What are secret societies but Cabals? They are companies held together by a common interest and organized for the benefit of the few to the exclusion of the many. Companies of large numbers, it may be, and containing smaller rings and cliques, but they are Cabals. They may have, many of them do have, worthy objects, and are agencies for good in the world, while others may have evil objects and do great harm. Their influence will be for good or ill, as their object is noble or debasing, and the extent of that influence will depend upon the unanimity and heartiness with which the members enter the work. In any case the effect will be greater than if the same number of persons were working separately, for the mere fact of union gives strength and force. What powers for and against the Union during the late war were the Union League and the Golden Circle! With what singleness of purpose and intensity of zeal their partisans labored, and how solidly and truly the organizations stood by their purposes. Socially, the close union in societies has the effect of cementing very closely the relations between members, gives them an interest in each other, in their welfare and success, and forms them into brotherhoods, whose fraternal bonds and feelings are felt and respected through life. Other forms of union, approaching nearly to that of the secret society, are presented in the various clubs, leagues and similar organizations with which our cities and larger towns are filled. At present there is scarcely a trade or profession whose members are not united and regularly organized into a society which shall care for the best interests of its adherents. Many times however such organizations, led by the thought of the strength of numbers and inflamed by fiery and thoughtless leaders, take steps which retard rather than advance their cause. Such unadvisable proceedings are the violent methods taken by the strikes of the great labor organizations. In these a few are supported by and control the many, and thus while the leaders may seem to be acting in the interests of their followers, they are really doing injustice to many of them. But such power have these unions gained that those not members are placed at a disadvantage in the struggle for work and thus suffer wrong. This partial control of labor by organizations in a like manner works evil to capital without benefiting the laborers. Many other clubs and leagues are formed, but most of them are brought into existence by passing causes, and soon either accomplish their object or fail to do so and disappear, and such have comparatively small influence upon the general public. In the list might be classed those organizations which, like the various scientific, humanitarian and literary societies, have always exerted their influence for good, and usually in a wise and judicious manner, and have aided materially in the advancement of the human race, both in morals and knowledge. Too much cannot be said in praise of those noble men who as organizers and promoters of these societies have given their time and energies to the advancement of humanity. But there are other organizations which in their results, if not in their plans and methods, approach more nearly to the usually received idea of the Cabal. Among these are two which are frequently noticed by the press and by politicians, and are destined to become issues in the life of the country. Chief of these is the Monopoly, an association of men engaged in some business or branch of business, who unite that they may control that business and dictate the terms upon which it shall be pursued. In any occupation it is often found necessary for two or more persons to furnish capital toward starting or continuing some enterprise, and thus by partnership to combine individual interests. But in a Monopoly something more than this is implied. In the older nations Monopolies were creations of the state — received their power from their rulers and held it during continuance of public favor. Sometimes as a reward, more often for a consideration either of service or of money, the exclusive right to deal in some article was given to some individual or company. This grant included the right to fix values and to control absolutely the trade in the article named. There could be no competition, and they could demand almost any price and make great profits. The monopolists usually were careful to dispose of their wares for moderate prices at first, until they had quieted suspicion and obtained a regular trade. Then gradually increased their exactions and would annex great fortunes before their demands became so exorbitant as to be refused. Thus their power was limited only by the amount of exaction which their customers would suffer. When the article of trade was only a luxury the people might well refuse to buy at exorbitant prices, but when the control of an indispensable article was given to an unscrupulous company the evil to the people was indeed great. At the present time, and in our own country Monopolies are not directly controlled by the government, although, many of them owe much of their power to monopolizing of officials and to favors granted by authority. The tariff system is often spoken of as a Monopoly, but it is one of such extended relations, and one whose benefits and disadvantages are so evenly balanced, that careful discrimination is needed to determine whether its influence is for good or ill. The different branches of business in which Monopolies are engaged in this country are mostly of such extent that one corporation cannot control any one of them, so that competition is not entirely destroyed, although it may be lessened. In this one of the evils of the royal monopolies is partially obviated. But there is still a source of evil in these corporations from the fact that the vast amount of capital which they control has great influence in political matters, and is liable to be exerted for low and selfish, if not for absolutely bad purposes. The second of these harmful Cabals is that shown in the management of the great political parties. The evil which may result in granting to a few individuals the control of a great political party, and through this party that of a state or nation is apparent to all. Especially bad will the result be when the few who have the control are unscrupulous and dishonest men. Then if this system must be continued, and at present there seems little better, the only remedy of its abuses is for each one to attend and study carefully the selection of leaders made by his party. Whatever may be the aim of any Cabal, the result of its efforts will depend entirely upon the faithfulness and ardor of its adherents. That every person will work the hardest and use his best energies and talents for his own interest is a commonly accepted fact. Then those organizations whose aims for personal advancement and benefit will always be the strongest and exert the most influence upon the world. From this it follows that the evil signification of the word Cabal is the more common one, and will continue to be so as long as selfish aims are strengthened and their objects gained by union.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

Miss Emma Saxton who has been teaching at Otsego for the past year, is spending her vacation at her father's, Dwight Saxton's.

Mrs. Nathan Green who has been sick with neuralgia for some time has been worse than usual for a few days.

C. C. Rowland went to Adrian last Saturday.

Among those who thought that Clinton did not hold charms sufficiently alluring to admit of spending the "Fourth" here, was one James McGuire. He started on the morning train for Adrian, and while at Lenawee Junction he boarded the wrong train and attempted to jump off after the train had started. He was thrown to the ground, sustaining several injuries among them, a broken nose. He concluded that Clinton was a good enough place for the rest of the day and took the noon train for home.

Charles Keyes of Grand Rapids, and Stuart VanDeMark of Detroit, came here Saturday from the latter place, and remained over Sunday.

Herbie Silvers met with quite an accident last Saturday. He had started to cross Main street from Smith's store to Freese's, and at the same time Frank Dorr was driving though town at full speed. Just as Herbie had reached the middle of the street the horse struck him and it is thought the buggy run over his hand. He escaped with slight injuries, however, and none would be blamed for the accident occuring, as Mr. Dorr was unable to control his horse on account of fire-crackers.

James Sherlock, from Grand Rapids, Nick Sherlock, from Chicago, and Thomas Sherlock, from Jackson, arrived here last week.

D. M. Bainbridge and Dell Goodrich drove from here to Pontiac last Tuesday. From there Mr. Bainbridge went to Battle Creek, where he remained until Saturday.

A young son of Talman Mansfield who lives three miles east of this place, had one of his eyes burned quite badly by a fire cracker last week. It was thought at first to be quite serious, but is now doing well.

Many of the Clinton people went to Wampler's Lake last Saturday, and nearly all report a glorious time. One or two accidents happened but fortunately not serious ones. Mr. Ansel Witherell's team was hitched near the hotel and becoming frightened run right down through the crowd that had gathered on the picnic grounds, scattering the people right and left, and before any one could catch them the buggy pole struck a stump, throwing the buggy over the horses, breaking it in several places. No one was hurt and the horses were soon restored to their proper places, nothing further occurring to mar the pleasure of the day.

George Freese came home the first of the week to spend a few days. He had not been feeling very well and thinks a short rest will restore him to his usual health.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Quite a growing time.

Foot ball is the corners passtime.

A fine lot of hay was put in last week.

Some went to Sand Lake and others went to Devil's Lake, but the crowd went to Adrian to see the big blow out on the Fourth. Anything for recreation you know.

Messrs Samuel and C. A. Sharp called on their parents Mr. and Mrs. Peter Sharp, Sunday.

Misses Flote and Pulva Rappleye, of Dundee, are visiting relatives and friends here at present.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Jackson rusticated in the country near Holloway, Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Walting, of Dundee, have been visiting their daughter, Mrs. W. J. Clark, for the past few days.

Book agents are more numerous than help for haying.

Prof. and Mrs. H. C. Wilson, of Blissfield are home on a visit.

Prof. E. A. Wilson, of Vassar, arrived home Saturday evening for a visit.

Mrs. John Houseman who has been failing slowly for some time, passed away Thursday evening. The funeral services were held at the church Sunday morning at the regular hour. Rev. W. J. Clack officiating.

Friends and relatives from St. John, Clinton Co., were here to attend the funeral of Mrs Housman.

On Wednesday evening at the Christian parsonage, Britton, by the Rev. James Wright, Mr. Frank Allen and Miss Minnie Ransome were united in marriage. After a few days of pleasure seeking they left for Richland where Frank is agent for the M. & O. R. R. at a salary of $45 a month. The happy couple will commence house keeping immediately. We hope for the young couple a prosperous, happy journey through life.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

A goodly number of our people attended the Blissfield camp meeting, and report it a success.

Last Sabbath was observed as Children's Day at the Friends' church.

Wm. D. Vaughan attended a grove meeting at Dover, Saturday and Sunday.

Miss Becca Preston has been having a pretty severe pull at diphtheria, but is now improving.

The people of Holloway took time by the forelock as usual and celebrated on the 3d. They indulged in fireworks, ice cream and lemonade and finally wound up with a bowery dance. There was a very large crowd out and good behavior was the order of the day, which we attribute in a great measure to the absence of benzine.

On the morning of the 4th, as Geo. Witt and his sister were driving through town on their way to Adrian, their horse became frightened at a calf in the corner of the fence and dumped them in the ditch. Fortunately very little damage was done with the exception of a few cracked spokes and a little bruising of the girl's face.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

A wandering Turk caused ripples of excitement by appearing on our streets without his talking machine. The poor fellow looked as if he realized the long distance between himself and home. On his way here a dog had ventured to bite him, and though blood flowed freely above his tar-colored ankle, he seemed indifferent to hydrophobia.

The children celebrated independence by lighting bon-fires and making the usual racket. It was a tame fourth, however, without a fight, scorch, or drown to make it interesting.

Business is having a vacation at present, but Elder Hill, of Napoleon, has collected $1300 dollars, and will rebuild our burned church that much.

ADDISON ATOMS.

The new drug-store of Power & Son is now enclosed and will be ready to occupy in a few weeks.

Our people distributed themselves pretty generally among the different celebrating towns on the fourth of July. At home the day was unusually quiet, but a fair display of fireworks illuminated the streets during the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Boley of Hillsdale, are in town this week and stopping at the residence of James Palmer, the latter's father, who has been dangerously ill for some days, Mr. B., is a former resident of the place and finds many friends to greet his return.

Our farmers are busy haying and getting ready for wheat harvest. The crop is unusually backward this year, but will be of fair quality if properly secured.

Levi Sherman and Lewis Bennett each seccumbed to the power of the grim destroyer last week. They were both residents of Rollin township and stood high in the estimation of the people.

The Methodist Episcopal and Congregational churches each announce both morning and evening service on the Sabbath day for the future. If Addison does not become spiritually pregnant it will be because of a poor quality of preaching, or a failure to utalize it on the part af the people. Five sermons and three Sabbath schools each seventh day, in a town of three hundred inhabitants ought to generate holy thunder enough to last until the middle of the week providing the material employed is fifty per cent genuine.

BABYHOOD for July urges upon parents the importance of "labelling" little children by always marking the full names and addresses in indelible ink on some easily-accessible part of their clothing, such as the inside of the colar-band. There can be no doubt that such a custom would be fruitful of many good results, and go far toward alleviating the anxiety of parents in cases of their little ones straying away from home, or becoming lost in a crowd or disabled by an accident. This number of BABYHOOD abounds in useful suggestions to mothers, and, in the variety of topics treated by its contributors and correspondents, proves its ability to fulfil its avowed intention to become a channel for the best thoughts of all who study the highest interests of child-life.

AN EXCELLENT APPOINTMENT.

The following is clipped from the Grand Rapids Democrat. Dan's old Tecumseh friends will congratulate him on his good fortune.

Daniel E. Soper, of Newaygo, one of the most prominent democrats of Newaygo county, has at last been rewarded for his diligent services in behalf of the party by the appointment to the position of postmaster at West Troy. He was in the city yesterday and was seen by a Democrat interviewer at Sweet's.

"Well, Mr. Soper," said the man of the press to the political war horse of the Ninth district, "I suppose you feel greatly honored by the distinction which the administration has conferred upon you by your appointment to the lucrative office of postmaster at that metropolis of the woods, West Troy?"

"N-n-no sir; I really cannot understand why I should have been picked out of so many applicants, but my feelings overcome me. Please talk to Mr. Peter Doran; I expect he will be my assistant—in stump grubbing."

The genial attorney of this city was roused from his evening slumbers and was accosted with "Mr. Doran, I understand you have accepted the position of assistant postmaster at West Troy. Is it true?"

"No, sir; it is like this. I have been instrumental in obtaining for my friend Daniel E. Soper the office of postmaster of that place, and he wished to make some return by giving me the position of his assistant. But my lucrative law practice here would hardly warrant me in accepting. I know he will perform the duties of the office with credit and with a little hard labor he can do all the work and it would be foolish for him to divide the salary with an assistant. He has procured bonds."

"What does the office pay?"

"I understand it is a $12.50 office. But my friend is only placed there for practice; he will be promoted probably in time to the office at Newaygo."

"But I understand West Troy is off the railroad about three miles?"

"Yes, that is so; but he was down here to-day purchasing a dog cart in which to carry the mail."

"To whom is due the credit of obtaining for him the office?"

"Besides myself he is indebted to Judge Fallass and Don M. Dickinson for the appointment," and Peter yawned and fell asleep.

The Detroit Free Press Sunday published its resume of wheat and corn prospects in Michigan, reports briefly covering advices from 117 points in 57 counties on wheat, and 115 points in 52 counties on corn, showing promise of an abundant wheat harvest, on which its summing up says: "The yield in most parts of the state promises to be fully up to last years good crop and in many sections to surpass it. The adverse reports come from Van Buren, Clinton, Washtenaw and Monroe counties, where the Hessian fly is doing serious damage. In Van Buren county from 20 to 25 per cent. seems to have been killed by the insect, and about the same amount in Clinton county, while in Washtenaw and Monroe there will be only two-thirds of a crop. In a few other localities very slight damage has been done. The harvest is two weeks late, and therefore it is not quite safe yet to predict positively that in quantity and quality the crop of the state will average better than last year." The corn crop reports are thus summed up: "Corn is very backward, and its chances lie all in the future. The cold weather has retarded its growth and kept it from maturing, and the cut worm took a great deal of the early planting. But corn looks healthy and a few real warm days will bring it out all right. The acreage has been reduced, but only slightly, by farmers plowing up their fields instead of replanting." Other notes from the report state that drouth has badly injured wheat in Antrim Co. and greatly retarded it in Roscommon, while the cold, dry weather of spring injured it in some portions of Saginaw Co., and in the vicinity of Belleville, Wayne Co., the severe winter damaged it considerably, and with the Hessian fly will reduce it to half a crop there.

Said Charles F. Beck superintendent of the Bradstreet agency, this morning: "Trade in Michigan still continues terribly depressed. Especially is this so in the country. Absolutely nothing is being done there. The farmers are busy, and the merchants have nothing to do but to open the stores sweep out and sprinkle the floors on warm days. There seems no prospect of a better condition of affairs or a stronger feeling, so far as I can see. In the east affairs are very much the same. It would be hard to state just what department of trade is suffering the most, they are all so bad. In the west, perhaps, the complexion of business is better than in the east, but not much. There is in short, only one line of goods that there seems to be any demand for, and that is tobacco. All wholesale tobacco dealers are full with orders and the factories are running at their fullest capacity."

THE NEW DRAIN LAW.

The drain law of 1885 is, without doubt a great improvement over its predecessors. A glaring defect in the law of 1881, which is supereeded by the present law, was the accidental omission of the machinery for public sale of the lands returned delinquent for drain taxes. Another feature of the drain law of 1881, which was very detrimental to the legality of drain construction, was the appointment of a special drain commissioner in cases where more than one township was interested. A recent decision of the supreme court, in which it was held that no official appointed by one township has jurisdiction in another township, fully exemplifies this defect, which in its previous workings has been a fruitful source of contention in the rural communities. It requires ability and experience to plan and construct a good drain, and the selection of a special officer to superintend the making of only one drain was not likely to result in good work, that would stand the test of the courts. Another important change in the law is that it provides for a jury whenever called for by any party whose lands are proposed to be condemned for right of way, as the constitution seems to intimate this personal right. The new law also provides for a system in which the taxes for the construction of a drain can be paid in two yearly installments, if so determined by the drain commissioner at the time of letting the contracts. Another provision is that all drain taxes proposed to be levied in any one year shall be certified to the board of supervisors, who shall order the taxes to be spread in the same way as other township, school and highway taxes. The jurisdiction of township commissioners is limited to such drains as are constructed wholly within their township and where all the lands to be assessed therefor are also situated therein. The county commissioner has concurrent jurisdiction with the township commissioner over such drains, and exclusive jurisdiction over all other drains extending over more than one township. Drains traversing more than one county come under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners of the counties so affected, and provision for these cases is made in a separate chapter. The county system is not made mandatory. All accounts of township commissioners are audited by the township board, and of the county commissioners by the board of supervisors. After the commissioner shall make his assessment on lands benefited by the drain, parties dissatisfied with his action have a right to appeal to the township board, which will act as a board of appeal. A thorough system of keeping the drain records by both the township and county commissioners is made by law. All drain taxes follow the land like all other taxes, and are returned delinquent on the same return and in the same manner as state and county taxes.—Blissfield Advance.

The New York Nation printed in its issue of June 25 a retrospect of the twenty years of its existence which was completed with that number. The Nation was founded in July, 1865, in recognition of the new order of things which was sure to follow the end of the war and the abolition of slavery. It at once espoused the cause of pure, unpartisan administration of the National Government; and the present condition of civil-service reform is owing to it more than to any other instrumentality. It has been conducted, in its two leading departments, Politics and Literature, by the same editors from the first number, and holds to day, as for the past twenty years, the first rank in each. It is the medium of the most thoughtful and cultivated discussion in the country—is, in fact, the only truly national journalistic forum. Its foreign correspondence is unrivalled. Its book reviews (by the leading scholars of the country) possess the highest authority. Each number contains a careful news summary, and the bound volumes are prized as the best obtainable chronicle of current history. Elm Corner Local: We give our readers, in another column, quite a batch of railroad news as we glean them from our exchanges. Whether these schemes will be carried out or not is hard to tell, but we copy them and give them to our readers for what they are worth. That the M. & O. road should buy the road bed and right of way from Marshall to this place, as we learn they did do some time ago, with no intention of ultimately using it does not seem probable. If they ever build a northern branch it will undoubtedly run directly on this old grade, and thus a road to this place from Marshall would be assured. Those who are better posted in the interests of the M. & O. R. R. declare that the northern branch must be built, and that it will be more profitable and of more importance than the main line.

Miss Rose Chester.

Mrs. Dunning, of Sunnyside, West Kensington, always considered that she had been particularly fortunate in her lodgers. She had but two, and they had been with her ever since the decease of the lamented Dunning—a clerk in the customs, who returning home on a certain pay-day in November, with two bottles of wine in his outer coat and one in his inner man, walked into the Thames and was drowned—had compelled her to retire to the basement, and offer the upper portions of her house, at moderate rent, to "gentlemen of quiet habits, seeking a comfortable home in a pleasant suburban neighborhood." On the very day that Mrs. Dunning's advertisement appeared in the Daily Telegraph, Mr Samuel Greeley, chief cashier in a government savings bank, engaged the sitting-room and the bedroom on the ground floor, and Mr. William Wylie, chief sub-editor of a local daily paper, engaged the sitting-room and the bedroom on the first floor.

The day, I think, was Saturday—indeed, it must have been, for Mr. Wylie, contrary to his habit on the other days of the week, was at home all the evening. About 8 p. m. the two gentlemen met in the passage, exchanged greetings, and entered upon a discussion on politics, which, becoming animated, resulted firstly in a withdrawal to the apartment of Mr. Greeley, and lastly in a copious libation of hot rum and water. Thus was begun an acquaintance which merged into friendship and deepened into mutual affection—Sam Greeley and Will Wylie became sworn brothers. The cashier, at the time of this story, was about 53 years of age, and the sub-editor 54; and on the subjects of politics, flannel nightcaps for use in winter, religion, and the proper quanity of sugar for a bowl of punch, they had only such trifling differences of opinion as tended to preserve their intercourse from monotony. Mr. Greeley was away from home during the day, and Mr. Wylie during the night, so that the former was generally coming in at about the time when the latter was going out. Nevertheless, they managed to see a good deal of each other. Mr. Greeley always visited Mr. Wylie in his bedchamber before he went out in the morning, and Mr. Wylie visited Mr. Greeley in his parlor before he went out in the evening. Saturday, however, was their favorite day. Saturday was a whole holiday with Mr. Wylie, and the two friends spent the hours of the evening together from 7 until midnight. Very quiet old fellows they were; never heard in the house except for about half an hour late on Saturday evenings, when Mr. Greeley brought out an aged flute, of which the lower keys were a little uncertain, and Mr. Wylie trolled an ancient love-song in a tenor voice, of which the upper notes were a trifle dubious. For eight years no harsh word had passed between them, and among the neighbors on either side their friendship had become a by word. Certainly Mrs. Dunning had reason to say that she was fortunate in her lodgers.

At the top of the house were two tiny bedrooms; Mrs. Dunning occupied one of them, the other had long been untenanted.

On Monday evening Mr. Wylie knocked at Mr. Greeley's door on his way out and was admitted.

"News, Sam, news! and you'll never guess it!" exclaimed the sub-editor.

The chief cashier gave full rein to his imagination, and said:

"Mrs. Dunning going to take a second?"

"No."

"Your Aunt Belinda dead, and left you the £1,000?"

"No."

"Blinkie been at the rum again?" Mr. Greeley's imagination was running dry.

Blinkie was Mrs. Dunning's cat, which, when the spirits in the gentlemen's cupboards disappeared too rapidly, she was in the habit of accusing of bibulous propensities.

"No."

"Then I can't guess any more, Will."

"What do you say to a new lodger?" queried Mr. Wylie.

"A new lodger!—here, in this house?"

"Yes, and a lady."

"A lady, Will! Do you mean to tell me that Mrs. Dunning has let the little back bedroom to a single lady?"

"Yes, and a young lady."

"Dear me! this must be inquired into. We had better ring up Mrs Dunning," said Mr. Greeley nervously.

"Why, Sam, old boy, we're not afraid of a young lady, are we?" asked Mr. Wylie.

"Eh?—no, not afraid; but you know, Will, we have always held the opinion that woman is——"

"So we have, Sam; especially when she's young."

"And you know, Will," went on Mr. Greeley, "that one of the conditions on which we took lodgings with Mrs. Dunning was that no other lodgers, and in particular no ladies, were to be admitted. And don't you remember that affair at Hammersmith the other day, when a young woman took lodgings for one night in a small respectable house, and nearly strangled an elderly gentleman in his bed in the middle of the night? We are neither of us strong men, Will."

"That's true, Sam. I did not look at it in that light. Perhaps you had better have an explanation from Mrs. Dunning. I'm late, and must go. Good-night. Don't get too low about it, old fellow, and bolt your bedroom door."

Mr. Wylie went out, and Mrs. Dunning brought in Mr. Greeley's tea-tray.

"What is this, Mrs. Dunning? A new lodger, and a lady?"

"Yes, Mr. Greeley, sir," said Mrs. Dunning, setting down the tray and interposing a couple of chairs between her lodger and herself. "But a huncommon case, sir—quite a case, as I said to myself acomin' up the stairs, quite a case to move Mr. Greeley's art. The young lady—for I'm sure she is a lady, sir—came and said she is but 18 years old, and obligated to live alone becos of a step-mother that uses her that shameful. Left a house in the next street, she say, through not likin' to meet on the stairs two young men which lodged there; bein' alone, and no protectin' 'and. Gets her own livin', sir, though she didn't say how, and desires of a quiet 'ome in a respectable 'ouse, where kitchen fire is not a hextra, and a mother's influence, as you might say, sir, throwed in with the table-linen."

"You say that she is young, Mrs. Dunning?"

"Says she's 18, sir, and don't look hardly that. Was going right away when I said my lodgers was gentlemen, but came back when I said, quiet solemn, they was both old enough to be her father."

"Eh?" said Mr. Greelev: "old enough to be her—"

"Father, sir—you and Mr. Wylie, sir; and such lodgers, I said, as a lady obligated through cruel fortin' to let apartments at 25 shillings—which they'd be cheap at 50—was never afore blessed with." When I mentioned your ages, sir,—yours and Mr. Wylie's,—the young lady said she'd stay at once. The name on the box is Chester—Miss Rose Chester."

"And where is Miss Chester at this moment, Mrs. Dunning?"

"In the back kitchen, sir, a curlin' of her front hair."

"Thank you, Mrs. Dunning. You may go."

"Thanking you, sir, which I will."

That interesting operation in the back kitchen referred to by Mrs. Dunning, and but faintly apprehended by Mr. Greeley, being at length completed, there was a sound of light feet tripping briskly up the stairs, and presently the same feet tripped down again, the front door was opened, and Miss Chester ran down the garden and into the street. Mr Greeley craned his neck perilously behind the window-blind, but saw only the back of the new lodger—though to be sure, it was a very pretty back. By and by the golden gate swung open, and she returned. A latch-key turned in the door. Just then it occurred to Mr. Greeley that he would brush his overcoat, and he stepped into the passage to take it from the peg. The passages in the houses at Sunnyside, West Kensington, being constructed on severely economic principles, there resulted a momentary encounter between Mr. Greeley and Miss Chester. Miss Chester's hands were full of packages, and in her maidenly embarrassment she let one of them fall. Mr. Greeley picked it up and replaced it. Miss Chester blushed and laughed a little musical laugh, and said, "Thank you." At the foot of the stairs the same ridiculous package escaped again. Mr. Greeley picked it up and replaced it; and Miss Chester blushed and laughed, and said, "Thank you," as before. She had hardly set foot on the first landing when that same absurd package and another package slipped from her arms and rolled to the bottom, of the stairs. Mr. Greeley was equal to the occasion, gathered them up, and carried them to where Miss Chester stood—no longer laughing but blushing in a more desperately bewitching way than ever. She said, "Thank you so much; how very careless of me!" took them from him, retreated into her room, and shut the door.

"What a very odd thing!" said Mr. Greeley as he returned. "What an extraordinary thing!" he said as he reached his sitting-room. "I never saw packages behave in that way before. A most interesting face," he went on, as he filled his pipe and seated himself by the window, "and quite pretty little manners. I don't know that Mrs. Dunning ought to have acted otherwise than she has done; she could scarcely have refused to take Miss Chester in. Old enough to be her father, eh? Let me think—55, and Will's 54. Will's older than I am."

In this way did Mr. Greeley meditate as he smoked his evening pipe.

Miss Chester's face was more than interesting, though, it was exceedingly pretty—an open, girlish face, with a fresh complexion, short, curly, yellow hair, and a slender figure, which showed to advantage in a gauzy summer

During the day, while Mr. Greeley helped to administer the affairs of the Government Savings bank, Mr. Wylie was at home, taking his rest and ease.

He made his appearance at midday, having breakfasted in bed, and took a turn in the garden to give himself an appetite for dinner. He was going up to his room as Miss Chester was coming down from hers, accompanied by a diminutive dog, which she held in a leash. The dog broke from the leash, and, oblivious of the dignity of the press, made for the legs of Mr. Wylie. Mr. Wylie had a constitutional fear of the canine race in general, and of its smaller members in particular, and so far lost his presence of mind as to give a feeble shout, at the same time retreating backward down the stairs, to the imminent peril of his head and limbs. Miss Chester seized her puppy somewhere in the neighborhood of the tail, held it up by that appendage, and, with her fan, slapped it indiscriminately in all parts of its body, all the while uttering the daintiest apologies to Mr. Wylie, who stood confusedly on the mat.

"You bad, wicked dog, how dare you?" and Miss Chester shook her dog with such exceeding vigor that Mr. Wylie feared the tail would give way.

"I am afraid it will come out if you shake it that way," he said mildly, and Miss Chester desisted.

Mr. Wylie opened the door for her, flattening himself against the wall to avoid the puppy's grinders; and Miss Chester, with a profusion of smiles and thanks, slipped out.

"Quite like a beam of sunshine, quite fairy-like, quite—I declare, I feel several years younger;" and Mr. Wylie ran his fingers through his scant gray stubble, pulled up his collar, and mounted the stairs two at a time. He took down from his bookshelf an old pocket-book, and scanned its pages attentively for a few moments. "Fifty-four last birthday; and Sam is 53. I fancy I look rather younger than Sam."

"Sam," said Mr. Wylie, when he met his friend in the evening, "what do you think of our new lodger?"

"A very pleasing young lady, I think," answered Mr. Greeley.

"A fine girl, I think, Sam," said the sub-editor.

"Oh, no, Will, I don't think I'd say that. Pleasing and—and very interesting, if you like," replied Mr. Greeley.

"No, no; that's not half strong enough. You haven't seen her eyes, Sam. My eye, what eyes! And her mouth—oh, Sam, what a mouth!"

"Steady, Will, steady," said his friend gravely. "Remember that maxim of ours."

"Oh, bother, Sam. I don't think the maxim will do at all in this case. Good night, Sam. I don't think you need bolt your bedroom door, old fellow."

And Mr. Wylie buttoned his coat and went out.

"Will is partially right," mused the cashier, as he sat over his tea. "This is very much more than an 'interesting young woman.' But I don't like 'fine girl' at all. She has lovely eyes. I didn't quite like Will's manner. I must talk seriously with him. Will ought not to forget his years."

Within the next couple of days a change had come over the little household. Miss Chester, all unwittingly, was the cause of it. Her girl's voice echoed sweetly through the house all day; and Mr. Wylie on the first floor heard it, and heard it not unmoved.

"What a delicious voice!" he said to himself a hundred times a day.

Then she would run up and down the stairs on little errands of her own, and out into the garden, where her presence made the sickly flowers and the dusty evergreens sicklier and more dusty.

When Mr. Wylie took his solitary turn there, after she had gone, he found the garden dingy which he had thought so gay before. Then he would look down at himself, and think:

"What a devil of a shabby old fellow I am! I must improve—I must brighten up a bit."

But he kept his feelings and his thoughts to himself.

Mr. Greeley heard the same bird-like voice in the evening, and would sit concealed in the window when Miss Chester ran out and down the street, following her dancing steps and wishing the days back again when he had been as light of foot as she was then. His parlor seemed not so cheerful

"But it needs another hand than mine to brighten it," he said. "I'm a rusty old chap," he thought at other times. "The rust has settled on me these many years. I wonder whether any of it would rub off now."

But he kept all these things to himself.

Something had interposed itself between the two old friends—the chief cashier and the chief sub-editor—an indescribable shadowy something that made their intercourse not quite what it had been before. They had not quarreled, they met and talked, morning and evening, as usual; but the spontaneity had gone out of their greetings, and they spoke constrainedly about things that did not interest them.

She went out every evening at about 7, and returned at half-past 10.

It was on the Thursday after the arrival of the new lodger that Mr. Wylie, having dined, took a walk in the direction of the shops. On his return, Mrs. Dunning greeted him with an expression of surprise:

"Law, Mr. Wylie, you look quite haltered; you've been and done something to yourself!"

"Do you observe an improvement, Mrs. Dunning?" the sub-editor asked, in a complacent tone.

"Well, sir, you certainly do look a bit spryer."

Mr. Wylie showed no offense at this criticism; on the contrary, it seemed to afford him satisfaction.

Mr. Greeley, when his friend visited him in the evening, noticed the change in his appearance.

"What have you done to yourself?" he asked. "Why, good heavens, William!" he exclaimed in a voice of alarm, "you've had your hat ironed!"

For answer, Mr. Wylie tilted his hat an inch or two forward in the direction of his left eyebrow, struck an attitude as nearly gallant as possible, and winked slowly with one eye.

"William," said Mr. Greeley, with much concern—"William, what is the matter? You are not well."

"Oh, yes, Sam," answered Mr. Wylie in a jocular tone. "I'm better than I have been for years. You notice the change, eh?"

But Mr. Greeley was neither pleased nor satisfied. He said very gravely:

"What does this mean, William? A man at your time of life does not have his hat ironed for nothing."

"I had mine ironed for sixpence," murmured Mr. Wylie.

"You are flippant, William," replied his friend. "I speak not of pence, but of sinister motives."

"Why Sam, come, now, it wanted ironing you know," urged the sub-editor in a conciliatory tone.

"William," replied Mr. Greeley very earnestly, "it has wanted ironing for years. Why choose this particular time? Would you trifle with the affections of a young and guileless heart?"

"Nonsense, Sam!" exclaimed Mr. Wylie testily; "what on earth has the ironing of a hat to do with a young and guileless heart?"

"I speak in this way, William," replied the chief cashier, "because I observe a change in you, William, let me beg that you will suffer yourself to be guided by me."

"Now, Sam, this is not reasonable. It is you who are changed, and not I. You're not yourself to-night. Keep quiet and recover. I mean to have my hat ironed as often as I choose. Good-night, Sam."

"Would William Wylie behave traitorously?" mused Mr. Greeley, when left to himself. "I trust not. But why, then, has he had his hat ironed? I must observe him narrowly. But why should I? Surely the girl has eyes. Surely a hat that has been restored for the sum of sixpence, which carries the evidence of restoration on its front, could not blind her to manifold personal defects."

Nevertheless, Mr. Greeley was ill at ease. He revolved the situation in his mind; he slept on it; and next morning, for the first time in seven years, went out without visiting his friend.

In the middle of the day, Mr. Greeley took to himself an hour for luncheon, spending it generally in an ancient chop and coffee house near Cornhill, where he partook of a small steak and a half-pint of Burton, with the newspaper propped against the pepper-bottle, in front of him, and the head waiter at his elbow expounding the virtues of the steak, or explaining many knotty problems in politics and political economy.

But on the day following the affair of Mr. Wylie's hat, Mr. Greeley, having swallowed hastily threepennyworth of bread and cheese—a species of passover, which he ate, like a child of Israel, with his loins girded, his shoes on his feet, and his staff (or umbrella) in his hand—took a twopenny 'bus to Oxford street, and was down at the establishment of a well-known tailoring firm, where, in the window, was a display of ready-made garments; which offered the combined advantages of a large pattern and a small price.

His eyes was particularly taken by a set of garments ticketed to the effect that "This kind of thing is in great request for honeymoons." He stood irresolute before it for a few minutes; then his brow clouded, and muttering, "He's had his hat ironed, has he?" Mr. Greeley made a dive into the shop.

Returning home in the evening, he spied his friend making a purchase of flowers at the florist's. It was a corner shop, with doors opening into two streets; and Mr. Greeley went into the door opposite to that by which Mr. Wylie had entered, and bought a basket of strawberries. Their eyes met across the counter, but they would not recognize each other.

It chanced that Miss Chester came up the street immediately behind them, and the three proceeded in indian file toward Mrs. Dunning's—Mr. Wylie in the van, with an immense and brilliant bouquet of flowers, the declining sun imparting a new glory to his hat; Mr. Greeley coming next, with his strawberries, and Miss Chester, all unwittingly, was the cause of it. Her girl's voice echoed sweetly through the house all day; and Mr. Wylie on the first floor heard it, and heard it not unmoved.

"What a delicious voice!" he said to himself a hundred times a day.

Then she would run up and down the stairs on little errands of her own, and out into the garden, where her presence made the sickly flowers and the dusty evergreens sicklier and more dusty.

When Mr. Wylie took his solitary turn there, after she had gone, he found the garden dingy which he had thought so gay before. Then he would look down at himself, and think:

"What a devil of a shabby old fellow I ries were the finest she had ever seen.

"But I could never eat them all myself. Won't you take one?" she said; and, with her own fingers, selected a strawberry which, in point of size, left the traditional giant gooseberry nowhere.

Mr. Greeley bolted the fruit at one mouthful, and immediately afterward became so strangely agitated that Miss Chester, with the deepest tenderness, asked him whether it had disagreed with him.

"No, Miss Chester," he replied, speaking with difficulty, for his emotion overpowered him. "No, it is not the strawberries."

Miss Chester expressed herself much relieved.

"I say, Miss Chester," repeated Mr. Greeley, with increased earnestness, "it is not the strawberry."

Miss Chester again said that she was very glad, and asked if he would take another.

Mr Greeley threw more tenderness than might have been expected into the assurance that he had eaten sufficient, and Miss Chester, reiterating her thanks, swallowed two strawberries at once, and slipped away.

On the landings blushing and eager, was Mr. Wylie with his bouquet. "Flowers, Miss Chester; a few flowers," he said tremblingly. "They have a language; perhaps you know it. They speak from the heart—to the heart—of the heart."

He had learned a verse of poetry for the occasion; but often when the heart is fullest the memory is most treacherous; and so it was with Mr. Wylie.

Miss Chester, partially laden with Mr. Greeley's strawberries, took Mr. Wylie's flowers with a modest, smiling "Thank you! Oh, how pretty! Will you not take one for yourself, and—and wear it?" And she plucked a moss-rose from the bouquet, and gave it to him.

Mr. Wylie carried it to his nose, tasted its color, and was seized with a violent fit of trembling.

With the quick, tender instinct of a woman, Miss Chester imagined a thorn or a surreptitious bee, and ventured on a timid inquiry.

"No, Miss Chester," answered Mr. Wylie; "but there is another kind of thorn, and there are bees in the——"

"Bonnet?" suggested Miss Chester, with a sweet smile.

"Ha, ha! very good indeed, Miss Chester! In the bonnet, eh? Yes, some of us, I fear, are afflicted with a bee in the bonnet." And Mr. Wylie threw a significant glance in the direction of Mr. Greeley's apartments.

"Will you take a strawberry?" said Miss Chester; but was sorry the next moment, for the expression on Mr. Wylie's countenance was at though she had invited him to take a dose of arsenic.

"But won't you go and put your rose in water? or it will fade," she said, anxious to cover the mistake which she perceived that she had made.

"Ah! will it ever fade?" replied Mr. Wylie, feeling that his poetry was returning to him.

"Oh, yes, indeed it will, ever so quickly!" said Miss Chester; "and so will mine, if I don't see to them at once." And she ran away up-stairs to her room.

An hour or so later, when Mrs. Dunning was occupied with Mr. Greeley's tea-table, she made a singular disclosure.

"Law, sir!" she said, "what do you suppose Miss Chester does for her living?"

"I can not say, Mrs. Dunning," replied Mr. Greeley. "What does Miss Chester do?"

"Rides 'ossback in a circus, sir."

Mr. Greeley let fall his meerschaum pipe, which would infallibly have been broken had not Mrs. Dunning caught it in her apron.

"Law, yes, sir," continued the landlady, "that's what she tells me. Not likin' to see her go out of a evening and come 'ome never afore 10:30, I say to her, "Do you think it respectable, my dear, and me not used to such ways, no, nor never shall be?" And then she up and says, quite quiet and modest, that she belongs to Butler's circus, which, from a child hup, she 'ave ridden the bareback 'oss, bein' the station of life to which providence 'as called her; likewise short skirts and satin shoes, and her 'air a flowin' down her back."

"And is this really the truth, Mrs. Dunning?" said Mr. Greeley.

"Which eight years come Michaelmas next you 'as been with me, sir, and never, which well you know it, Mr. Greeley, found me anything but truthful."

"Of course I don't doubt your word, Mrs. Dunning; but it is a strange profession for such a girl as Miss Chester seems to be. Butler's circus, do you say?"

"Yes, sir, they hacts close again James street, and Miss Chester's on in the front scene, sir, which, being but young, the manager lets her, so as she can be 'ome and abed a decent Christian hour. Young Mr. Butler, she says, always sees her 'ome, and sometimes comes to fetch her. I'do believe this is the gentleman a'comin' up the garden."

"A tall, good-looking young man knocked at the door and inquired for Miss Chester. The next moment the young lady herself ran down-stairs, and a greeting passed between them which, to the ears of Mr. Greeley and Mrs. Dunning, sounded a little less than brotherly and more than cousinly.

"Did you hear that, Mrs. Dunning?" asked Mr. Greeley, in reference to a certain pleasant noise that echoed softly from the passage.

"Which, thanking you, sir, I 'as my 'earing good," answered Mrs. Dunning with dignity, as though she felt that a kiss in the passage in some way compromised her reputation as a landlady.

"I should like this to be kept from the ears of William," Mr. Greeley afterward said to himself. "But Mrs. Dunning will certainly tell him; and what then? He will go to this place. Well, I will go too."

It was Saturday, and at 7 in the evening an elderly gentleman of benign aspect, wearing an expressive suit of tweeds, purchased a pit ticket for Butler's circus.

Shortly afterward, an elderly gentleman of mild appearance wearing a resplendent hat a little on the left side of his head, purchased a ticket for the gallery.

Mr. Greeley had left his circus days a long way behind, and found the performances in the ring anything but enlivening. He sat bolt upright in the front row of the pit, and kept his eyes fixed on the entry by which he expected that Miss Chester would make her appearance on the fiery bare-backed steed. He had looked eagerly for her name on the programme, but found it not; and was fain to console himself with the suggestion that probably she played her part under another name. Presently he had an uncomfortable sensation that he was being stared at; and, looking up, he saw Mr. Wylie gazing down on him from the gallery. Mr. Wylie's expression indicated a puzzled state of mind, and the eye which had not its visual power obliterated by Mr. Wylie's hat appeared to be fascinated by Mr. Greeley's new clothes. This made Mr. Greeley more uncomfortable still. The performance proceeded, but no Miss Chester appeared on any steed, fiery, bare-backed, or otherwise. There were many young ladies with brief skirts and flowing hair, who pirouetted on prancing steeds, and leaped through hoops, and slapped the face of the clown and said "Hoop-la" when the ringmaster cracked his whip; but among them was not Miss Rose Chester. Mr. Greeley began to be aweary and to wish he were in bed. The hoof of the fiery steeds threw up sawdust in his eyes and the clown leveled his best joke directly at him. The performance was over, and Miss Chester had not appeared at all.

Sad and dispirited, Mr. Greeley left his seat and followed the crowd out of the circus. "Can she be ill?" he asked himself. "Can anything have happened to her? She was still in the house when I left it."

The two friends met at the outer door, but feigned not to see each other, and went home by separate ways. Mr. Wylie getting in a little advance of Mr. Greeley. A cab was standing before the garden gate when Mr. Greeley reached it, and the circumstance, being an unusual one at that hour did not fail to strike him. As he went up the path he encountered a man carrying a trunk, another unusual circumstance which also made its impression. "What can this be?" said Mr. Greeley, with a sense of sinking at the heart. Then a tall lady, dressed in black, came out of the house and followed the man with the trunk. After her—Mr. Greeley rubbed his eyes and pinched himself, but there was no deception—walked Miss Rose Chester, flushed, but with her pretty little head erect, and stepping with an air of defiance. In the doorway stood Mrs. Dunning, remonstrating volubly.

"Oh, you naughty, naughty girl, to go and deceive me like that! I'm ashamed of you, I am!" said Mrs. Dunning.

But Miss Chester answered her not. Mr. Greeley, lost in bewilderment, stood aside to let her pass. She looked at him with yearning eyes, and said, sweetly:

"Good night, Mr. Greeley; good-by; I am going."

The lady in black turned round and said sharply: "Hold your tongue, miss!"

"I shan't hold my tongue," replied Miss Chester. "Good-by, Mr. Greeley," she said again, "and thank you ever so much for the strawberries; I've eaten them all."

"It's the cruel stepmother," thought Mr. Greeley, and wild notions of a rescue crossed his mind. But Miss Chester passed on following the lady in black. They reached the cab, the driver mounted to his seat, and the horse dashed away into the darkness at the rate of two miles and a half an hour.

Mr. Greeley, in a state of the utmost agitation, hastened to the house. "Mrs. Dunning, Mrs. Dunning!" he gasped, "what is all this?"

"Oh, sir! Oh, Mr. Greeley!" wailed the landlady, "she've been and played on us, a young hussy; been and deceived us, sir, you and me and Mr. Wylie and all of us!"

"Played on us! deceived us! Who has done this? What do you mean, Mrs. Dunning?"

"That young woman, sir; that Miss Chester. Cruel stepmother, indeed! It's a cax, sir, a blessed cax, every bit of it. Why, that lady in black, that's her ma. Traced her 'ere, and says, says she, the young baggage 'as run away from 'ome, and her family crazy for her this week past. A little piece of himperence to stand up and tell me she's eighteen, and her ma's says she's only fifteen, and the plague of her life."

"But the circus, Mrs. Dunning, and—and, young Mr. Butler?" exclaimed Mr. Greeley, aghast.

"Sir," answered Mrs. Dunning solemnly, "there ain't no circus, and there ain't no Mr. Butler. Bare-back 'oss, indeed! Why, her ma says, to her belief, she've never been inside no circus in her life. And as for that young man—well, the less we say about that young man, to my thinkin', the better, sir."

"But why did she run away from home?"

"Sperrits, sir, sperrits and 'igh jinks; that's what her ma says. Says she can't keep her at 'ome, nohow. A young parcel o' fibs and brass. I'd comb her 'air for her, I would!"

"And do you mean to tell me, Mrs. Dunning, that I have been on the verge of a quarrel with Will Wylie for the sake of a child of 15, who has run away from home? Mrs. Dunning, Miss Chester deserves to be whipped!"

"I shouldn't wonder if her ma would manage that little business for her, sir," replied Mrs. Dunning with much satisfaction.

Meanwhile, Mr. Wylie, standing outside his door, had overheard this colloquy.

"Have I been on the point of breaking with Sam Greeley, on account of a chit of 15?" Mr. Wylie indignantly asked himself. Then he went downstairs with his hat in his hand.

Mr. Greeley heard him, and met him at the door.

"Will!"

"Sam!"

"We have been, Will, a couple of——"

"Old fools, Sam; downright old fools!"

By this time the downright old fools were clasping hands, and looking at one another a little shame-facedly and very affectionately.

"We're both in the same boat, Will," said Mr. Greeley; "but you know I did say from the first that woman was——"

"So you did, Sam; and so she is, especially when she's a girl of 15."

Very shortly after this there stood on the table a capacious bowl, from which a gentle steam went up, and an odor of a sweet savor pervaded the room.

Later still, Mr. Greeley brought out his flute, and Mr. Wylie sang two or three dozen of the songs of his youth.

The bowl was getting low when Mr. Greeley said: "There is a little thing by Longfellow, Will, which I think would be appropriate to the occasion. I don't know that it has been set to music, but I dare say we could sing it between us."

"I know it," said Mr. Wylie; "lead on, Sam, and I'll follow."

And the two old fellows lifted up their voices and sang:

I know a maiden, fair to see—
Take care!
She can both false and friendly be—
Beware! beware!
Trust her not, she is fooling thee!

Then Mr. Greeley insisted on accompanying Mr. Wylie to his bed-chamber, a kindly office which, thanks to the excellence of the rum punch, was not wholly superfluous.—Tinsley's Magazine.

Read what the people say concerning the ability of Dr Thomas' Eclectric Oil to cure asthma, catarrh, croup, colds, etc. Mrs. Dora Koch of Buffalo, says: "For croup it is decidedly efficacious." Mrs. Jacob Mellisor of Marion, Ohio, says the same thing. S. S. Graves, Akron, N. Y., writes: "Had asthma of the worst kind; took one dose of Thomas' Eclectric Oil and was relieved in a few minutes. Would walk five miles for the medicine and pay a bottle for it." Druggist C. R. Hall, Grayville, Ill., says: "Cured an alarmed throat for me in twenty-four hours." "Sat up in bed and weighed the phlegm. Nothing was wet with perspiration. My wife insisted that I use Thomas' Eclectric Oil. The first teaspoonful relieved me." E. H. Perkins, Creek Centre, N. The external application is a cure for rheumatism, cuts, cuts, burns, bites, bruises, etc. When visiting the druggist, ask for what he knows of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil; if he has been long in the drug trade he will speak highly of it.

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs; none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1857 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now 67 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me.

HORACE FOSTER, "BROTHER."

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last summer my little boy, three years old, was taken with croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less time than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours,

MRS. EMMA GIDNEY."

159 West 128th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried. A. J. CRANE."

Lake Crystal, Minn., March 13, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. JOSEPH WALDEN."

Sylvania, Miss., April 5, 1882.

"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, believing as I do that but for its use I should long since have died from lung troubles. T. BRAGDON."

Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

THE AGE OF TATTOO.

Illuminated Linen as It Appears to Impress a Noted Humorist.

I do wish the washee washee people of the United States would call a National Convention of launders and laundresses, and adopt a uniform style of marking the linen that passes through their hands. I have suffered much from the diversity of talent displayed in the private marks of Anglo, German, Franco, Hibernian and Chinese-American laundries. I am a man not given to novelties. I like variety, but I want it to be the same kind of variety. I do not like to go around the country lecturing in the guise of the tattooed man of Borneo.

Now, when I put on my war paint and sarabed forth to seek whom I might gather the lecture committees in I had my scanty store of linen marked with the real initials of my own honored name—that Mrs. O'Mahony's husband might know whose shirt he was wearing to church, and Mlle. Celeste might know whose handkerchief she stole, and that Wun Lung might be able to swear that the collars he offered for sale were given him by his deceased friend, Ram Jam Bang. But did these simple marks content the wash ladies and laundry gentlemen? Nay, not so. The first laundry gentleman marked everything I had with a big black X in indelible ink, save only my—excuse my blushes—hose. These dainty little fabrics of silk and worsted, with faint traces of cotton, he labeled by sewing a large, white patch about midships on the after part of the veal of the same. I left all these marks on, hoping that in connection with the regularly ordained initials they would content the next washer gentleman. But he was a Trojan, and he put on a mark something like the Greek letters phi, psi. This was in Philadelphia. At Pittsburgh I had a round up of my linen at the Great Western Satin Gloss Laundry, where the man with the indelible ink labeled everything XO, big and black, and sewed additional patches on my—ahem! hose. I next corralled my things at the establishment of Ping Ping in Columbus, O., who stitched in a fire cracker joke in red thread. We—I and my herd of linen and manuscript—drifted slowly to the Northwest, and the wardrobe was watered at a French laundry in Kalamazoo and branded OHA. At Minneapolis it went to the hotel laundry and came back bearing the new legend LT with a lozenge around it, and with red tags on my s—cks. This was growing interesting, and when a brand of blue ink came into the plot at Council Bluffs and was cast for XOA, I sat up half the night reading my things. I am fond of literature anyhow, and when the mental pabulum on my linen was reinforced at Concordia, Kan., by the addition of VZ in a black circle to the bill of fare, I began to look about for a publisher. At Kansas City Hang Hi worked in a crazy quilt stitch on me, and at Decatur, Ill., the launder had a rubber stamp, the design whereof was a valentine heart, inclosing the letters XLX. I do not know the meaning of the symbol unless it refers to my age, which certainly has nothing to do with the age of my wardrobe. This man sewed white tags on the ears of my st—ck—ngs, with the same design printed on them. At Terre Haute, Ind., they sewed tags on everything, from withers to hock, and at Valparaiso they stitched XYH on the entire harness, and at Upper Sandusky I got NYX inked on everything from collar to crupper. At Beaver Falls, Pa., a Chinese gentleman embroidered on all my things portions of a strange, weird alphabet wherever he could find room for it, and at Uhrichsville, O., my linen was returned to me with a note stating that all articles must be plainly marked before they could be received at that laundry.

Now, I want to know if this is fair? It wasn't my fault that the other laundries had used up all the available space on my raiment before I got to Uhrichsville. I don't really enjoy this sort of thing. When I wake in the night and see my pallid shirt hanging over a chair back in the moonlight I am frightened, being a nervous man, thinking that Captain Costentenius, the tattooed man of the Antipodes, has got into my room. I appeal to the laundry men to adopt some uniform system. Let each free-born American citizen who amasses more than one shirt select his own brand, have it duly registered, published in the official paper of the county in which he resides, and let it go at that. I don't like to have my friends tell me that for a man who dresses so quietly as I do, those figured shirts are in bad taste. Where are the reformers? Here is a crying evil that stalks up and down this fair land like the Augean stables, blighting the noonday with its midnight cry, and waiting for some strong hand to cut the Gordian knot of its labyrinthine mazes that like a Gorgon horror freezes our blood into stone with the burning breath of its iron heel. Let the new Administration see to it.—Robert J. Burdette, in Brooklyn Eagle.

Self-Possession and Ability.

Self-possession is something apart from ability. It is more in one direction and less in another. Many persons of great abilities are painfully lacking in self-possession, and others of very small powers are rarely at a loss. It comes rather through a fair degree of self-knowledge and a practical exercise of those abilities, great or small, which we do possess. Our own experience shows us this. Most of us are self-possessed in at least one direction, and that we shall find to be the case in which we have had the most constant practice and the best opportunities of testing ourselves. The mechanic or business man or woman, or artist or philosopher, may be undecided, vacillating, constrained and ill at ease in general society, or in political circles, or in a hundred other situations, but in their respective employments or in matters closely connected with them, they at once assume a calm and assured manner that tells of their regained self-possession.—Boston Home Journal.

THE CHARMING WIDOW.

How She Impressed a Hard-Hearted Storekeeper, as She Always Does, with Her Dainty Sobs and Tearful Glances.

She was pretty and sweet, so much so that the several clerks nearly broke their necks in struggling to see who would be the one to wait on her, but she ignored them all, and, sitting down on a stool, drew from her pocket a handkerchief which she held in readiness for an application to her eyes, and sent for the manager. He soon came up to the lady, who, with the handkerchief to one eye, flashed the other brilliant orb at his, and told her story thusly:

"Mr. B——, Charley, my husband (sob,) is dead and I have no suitable (sniffle) mourning. I came down to see (gulp) if you would trust me for a (sob) mourning outfit." (Sniffle.) Here the other eye was hid behind the handkerchief, while a kind of cold chill shudder passed over her.

"But, my dear madame, I don't know you. It would be rather departing from our rules to comply with your request," replied Mr. B——, politely. "How much of a bill did you wish to buy?"

"I want (sob) everything as nice (sniffle) as I can get (sob) about (another sniffle) $200, I (sob) guess.

"I am sorry, but as you are a stranger to me I shall have to decline unless you can furnish security or come recommended by some one known to us."

"Do you (sob) know Mr. (two sobs) Mr. Richfellow?" (Two sniffles.)

"Yes, madame, I know him; do you think he would guarantee the payment of the bill?"

"I don't (sob) want (sniffle)—want you to (sniffle) ask him (sniffle) because I am going (two sniffles) to marry him (sob) when my (sob) mourning has expired." (Sob.)

"Well, in a case of that kind of course we will trust you; we can present the bill to him after your marriage."

"O, thank you (brightening up), thank you; indeed, that will be all right. Now I want a box of black gloves number six and a half, fourteen yards of cashmere, thirty yards of crape cloth, twelve yards of veiling, two boxes of black silk hose (number eight) and the necessary trimmings; please fix it up nice. Don't you think I will look nice in mourning?"

Mr. B—— looked into her eyes, his heart began to jump, and thinking discretion the better part of valor, he assured her that her order would be filled and the lady departed smiling. Mr. B—— after the flash of the pretty widow's eyes would have filled a thousand dollar order and paid it out of his own pocket. He is bald-headed.—Brooklyn Times.

CHANGHI.

Visit of a Traveler Who Enjoyed His Surroundings.

A scene I cherish with especial tenderness is that passed at Changhi, behind Singapore. A Malay fishing village lay beneath our bungalow upon a broad and snowy beach. In barbarous regions of the North men live underground, but these dwellings were suspended in the sunny air among plumes of cocoanut and betel; behind them rose the shadowy jungle. There was no cultivated land in sight, for the Malay finds his harvest and his garden in the sea. The smooth sand below high water mark was a parterre of sponges, green and red, and purple blue, intermixed with coral. Old fashioned people in Europe cherish certain round masses of limestone, daintily fluted, and put them under a glass case for ornament. Imagine their beauty in the spot where nature places them, every lip and hollow on the cream white surface traced out in vividest pencilling of green, with the seaflowers of sponge around them.

But after the first impulse of delight one almost comes to overlook this charming foreground; for beneath the water lives a tangle and a maze of all things lovely for shape and color and growth and motion. Coral takes a hundred flowery forms, weeds branch like trees or wave like serpents; sponges are cups of amethyst and ruby. When waves lie still, one sees just as clearly into the depths below as into the air above, and almost as far as it seems. The vegetation is gigantic in its loveliness. There are coral growths shaped like an Egyptian lily and as white, but three feet in diameter, wherein a mermaid might take her bath. Others break into a thicket, each twig covered with snowy rosettes which bear a morsel of green velvet in their bosoms. Others are great round hillocks diapered with emerald, while here and there a bush of scarlet thorns springing from their sides. Through and over the garden long silvery weeds tremble and quiver in a net. Small fish as quick as humming birds, and almost as gay, dart to and fro. Water snakes float past in coils like Indian enamel of every shade, in red and brown and yellow and purple. I am grateful that fate allowed me three weeks of life at Changhi.—Frederick Boyle, in Belgravia.

Pompeii's Danger

There is reported danger that the latest eruption of Vesuvius will overwhelm Pompeii afresh. The whole of the old city has not yet been disinterred by any means. It is slow work to resurrect a wealthy place which once contained at least 20,000 inhabitants, from such a deep tomb of ashes and scoriæ; and furthermore the work had to be prosecuted with extreme caution. Reckless haste might result in the destruction of priceless works of art; a too sudden exposure to light and air might cause masterpieces of fragile material to crumble into dust. It has been hoped that further researches would be rewarded by the discovery of precious manuscripts—works of unknown authors, or complete copies of works whereof the greater part has been lost, and of which we possess only fragments of exquisite beauty. Already many manuscripts have been found; but these were not of the character hoped for. A deluge of lava would end all research of this kind, and deprive the world of one of its most delightfully interesting places of pilgrimage.—N. O. Times-Democrat.

A Primitive Tribe

Dr. Hunter describes a peculiar tribe in India which has preserved an extreme primitiveness. The people are called Leaf Wearers, because they wear the costume of Adam and Eve before the fall; or, more strictly speaking, they did so until the English persuaded them to adopt cloth.

In 1871 the English officer called together the clan, and after a speech handed out strips of cotton for the women to put on. They then passed in single file to the number of 1,900 before him, made obeisance to him, and were afterward marked on the forehead with vermillion as a sign of their entering into civilized society. Finally, they gathered the bunches of leaves which had formed their sole clothing into a great heap, and solemnly set fire to it. This leaf-wearing tribe had no knowledge of the metals till quite lately, when foreigners came among them, and no word existed in their native language for iron or any other metal. But their country abounds in flint weapons, so that the Juangs form a remnant to our own day of the stone age. "Their huts," writes the officer who knows them best, "are among the smallest that human beings ever deliberately constructed as dwellings. They measure about six feet by eight feet. The head of the family and all the females huddle together in this one shell, not much larger than a dog kennel." The boys and the young men of the village live in one large building apart by themselves; and this custom of having a common abode for the whole male youth of the hamlet is found among many aboriginal tribes in distant parts of India.

He Kept the Whole House Awake

Washington, D. C.—Mr. F. O. McCleary, a prominent solicitor of patents of this city, was troubled for several weeks with a severe cough, which not only deprived him of sleep but annoyed others. The only thing which did him any good, he says, was the new prepasation Red Star Cough Cure, a purely vegetable compound, free from opiates, narcotics or poisons of any kind.

A hotel in Boston built of stone and brick 96 and 69 feet frontage with basement and seven stories above the sidewalk, was moved nearly 100 feet in order to make a change in the street. One side was supported by eight granite columns twelve feet high, the whole building weighing 5,000 tons beside the furniture. The occupants of the stores and the hotel were not disturbed in the removal.

A Great Discovery.

Mr. Wm. Thomas, of Newton, Ia., says: "My wife has been seriously affected with a cough for twenty-five years, and this spring more severely than ever before. She had used many remedies without relief, and being urged to try Dr. King's New Discovery, did so, with most gratifying results. The first bottle relieved her very much, and the second bottle has absolutely cured her. She has not had so good health for thirty years." Trial bottles Free at C. A. Wright & Co's Drug Store. Large size $1.00.

Vasser girls ate 692 pounds of candy last year. Sweets to the sweet. But alas! they ate also forty bushels of onions.

The Secret of Wealth.

Broken down invalids do you wish to gain flesh, to acquire an appetite, to enjoy a regular habit of body, to obtain refreshing sleep, to feel and know that every fiber and tissue of your system is being braced up and renovated. If so commence at once a course of Golden Seal Bitters. In one week you will be convalescent. In a month you will be well. Don't despair because you have a weak constitution. Fortify the body against disease by purifying all the fluids with Golden Seal Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, are rendered disease proof by this great invigorant. Ruinous bills for medical attendance may be avoided by counteracting the first symptoms of sickness with these Bitters. They are recommended from friend to friend, and the sale increases daily. We warrant a cure. They are a positive cure also for all female complaints. In these diseases they have no equal. Take no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

Taken together, all the beauties of art and nature do not interest the inquisitive female so much as the view she gets through the key hole.

News About Town.

It is the current report about town that Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs is making some remarkable cures with people who are troubled with Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis, and Consumption. Baker & Hall will give any person a trial bottle free of cost. It is guaranteed to relieve and cure. Price 50 cents and $1.

In the literary as well as the military world, the most powerful abilities will often be found concealed under a rustic garb.

To most children the bare suggestion of a dose of castor oil is nauseating. Why not, then, when physic is necessary for the little ones, use Ayer's Cathartic Pills? They combine every essential and valuable principle of a cathartic medicine, and being sugar-coated are easily taken.

A little tot of a girl coaxed two nickel from her father on Thanksgiving day, saying she would use one for candy and the other she would give to the missionaries. Before executing her expressed intentions she lost one while at play, and running to her mamma, said: "Oh, mamma, I have lost my missionary nickel."

"That tired feeling" from which you suffer so much, particularly in the morning, is entirely thrown off by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

A metal hitherto unknown, and which is said to be likely to supplant nickel in general use, has been discovered in the Lehigh Valley.

A celerated physician declares that "Hunt's Remedy will cure any case of kidney disease that can be cured."

A celebrated doctor says that "other preparations as substitutes for Hunt's Kidney Remedy, are worthless in comparison to it."

TECUMSEH, MICH., JULY 9, 1885

The Saginaw Courier, Tim Tarsney's paper, makes the following shot at Don Dickinson: "It is only a few years since that the people of Michigan freed themselves from the thraldom of one political boss. They are not likely to submit to another at this late day."

The cholera is having a fearful run in Spain, and hundreds of new cases are reported daily with a large percentage of deaths. It can hardly be expected, that with all the quarantine precautions which can be adopted, the summer can pass away without the introduction of the deadly disease into our eastern cities.

The season has arrived when some would be fashionable people close their shutters, barricade their front doors, and post a notice upon the front fence, that they have "gone to the summer resorts." However, these people are nearly always at home, secluded in the back parlor, dining room or kitchen. Pass around to the back door and you may surprise them, possibly.

The American people are watching with the most intense anxiety the daily reports of General Grant's condition. As a matter of fact, the old hero has never been so universally idolized by all classes of our citizens as since it has become almost certain that he has nearly reached the end of his journey. Although he has been a little more comfortable since leaving the heat of New York city, his attending physicians do not attempt to disguise the fact that his disease is making rapid progress and liable to terminate fatally at any hour.

The New York World has worked earnestly, faithfully and successfully to raise the funds necessary to complete the pedestal on which the statue is to stand, and for this work that enterprising journal is deserving of all praise. In coming ages when the storms and the seasons shall be powerless to crush or corrode this monument of love and the name of M. Bartholdi shall be enshrined in the casket of imperishable memory, it must not be forgotten that the public spirit of Joseph Pulitzer saved our fair country from humiliation and disgrace, by making it possible for the statue to be received—not calculated to wound the feelings of the generous donors.

TOUGH TIMES.

It is the dull season of the year when even in prosperous times there is something of a commercial stagnation that continues until after the crops have been harvested. The fact that there was no spring trade this year to amount to anything does not make of the present season an exception to the general rule. All branches of trade—manufactures, transports, merchandise and mines—are suffering unusual depression not only in volume, but also in profits. The state of the industries of the United States compares, in some respects, more than favorably with those in other countries, but that fact is scarcely consolatory.

Commercial and financial reports from week to week show that with a large increase in the amount of loans there is a much larger increase in deposits. Money is withdrawn from the ordinary channels of trade and banked. Thus the stringency of the money market is increased. The future disposal of these surplus reserves is a matter of considerable doubt. There is bound to be a change in the business situation, sooner or later. If one could believe that these reserves would be withdrawn from the banks and put into active circulation as soon as business begins to move—far off as such movement may be—he could then feel assured of a tremendous boom in the future. But the conservative inclination of capital, which has been slowly and surely developing in this country, has been intensified by hard times, and gives some reason to believe that the surplus will be withdrawn from the banks very slowly. If that should prove to be a fact the return of better times, when it comes, will scarcely be marked by any decided boom, and will be appreciated only in a healthful, normal movement in the direction of prosperity.—Ex.

THE POWER OF HOPE

Essay Read Before the Alumni Society by Miss Julia A. Conklet

We give herewith the essay read by Miss Julia A. Conklet at the Alumni Reunion and which was crowded out last week for want of room.

There are few words that stir our hearts to such glad sympathy as the simple words "I hope," uttered by a dear friend, whose face, still bearing evidence of severe and long toil, now glows with joyous expectancy. There are fewer still that have the power so to stagnate every pulsation of thought as those same words coming from the lips of one crushed beneath a heavy weight of sorrow, who yet has faith to grasp a promise and cling upon it. Forbidden to enter the inner sanctuary of the soul, and explore its hidden recesses, we pause on the threshold, and bow with reverence at the presence of peace and joy, by which we feel us there and we become silent with an awe which certainly is with gladness, because we are assured of secret springs of strength, of unfailing sources of spiritual wealth. What, then, is Hope? And where is its power? What is its origin? And what its end? "Hope," says one of our lexicographers, "is the desire of some good, accompanied by at least a slight expectation of obtaining it." And again he tells us "It is the confident expectation of good." These are plain words, surely, and rich in powers of suggestion, yet they fail to give us any adequate conception of the nature of Hope. Then the poet comes to our aid, and tells us Hope is a "guiding star," a "beacon light," the pledge of joy, the "friend of Courage," the "sister of truth," and this figured she becomes to us a staff and helper and a most efficient factor in every worthy character. Hope is positive and steadfast. Not the wish, not idless day-dream of ease, or of power and boldness, has in it a single element of hopefulness. These come and go. But they leave us without any purpose. They amuse, but they do not inspire.

Not so Hope. She is prophetic. In the face of toil, fatigue and pain, in spite of bitter disappointments and wearisome delays, she looks forward, confidently, to a glorious end, and a sure reward. In the midst of perplexities and discouragements, which so often come upon us from difficulties without, and oftener still arise from the weakness of our own hearts, Hope steadily points us forward, and stimulates us to renewed exertions by her assurances of ultimate success. For the things for which we toil in hope are not the misty castle images of an idle fancy, nor the delusive phantasms of an excited imagination. They are the realities of Time and Eternity. They are the goals to which we feel it to be possible for us to attain. Bunyan's "Pilgrim," pressing on through trials, obstacles, temptations and manifold discouragements, toward the "Shining Gate at the end of the way," is a true picture of every hopeful worker. John Howard, reforming the prison discipline of England; William Wilberforce, laboring to secure the emancipation of slaves; David Livingstone, devoting his life to the work of opening Africa to Christian Missions and Christian civilization; each had a definite hope. The work before him was no sinecure, the very idea of success seemed to most preposterous. But they were no visionaries. Cool judgment, intelligent preparation, and patient determination were brought to their work. Each had studied the subject in the light of all the information that could be obtained, and had counted the cost, well. More than this, each felt that he had a Divine commission for the undertaking, and God who bade them "Go forward" thus pledged Himself to the accomplishment of that which he commanded. Their hope of success was, therefore, assured. For the work was not theirs, but God's. To them belonged only the duty of fulfilling their appointed tasks. And when, at last, they stood upon the borders of the Promised Land, and saw its goodliness, and knew that its realities were theirs, could they count them dearly bought? It is ever thus. There are duties devolving upon each of us, as members of families, and of society. The full grandeur and glory of the promise attached to the finished work we rarely apprehend—we may not comprehend—until we see its fulfillment. The ideal set before us with every task is perfection. With this constantly in view, it is necessary that we study, plan, and labor for the realization of the ideal. That it is our duty to strive for this, none will question. Divine authority has laid upon us the command, "Be ye perfect." That it is possible for us to reach the standard, none can doubt, who considers whence the command comes, and with it the power to fulfill. Therefore, though every earthly longing be disappointed, and every desire for earthly honor or ease be thwarted, we have a glorious hope, to which we do well to take heed. And the patient, earnest, self-denying toil, the serious, purposeful struggle, which are demanded of us in the pursuit of these things, are not merely the means to the end. They are evidence of the object which calls them forth, and a pledge of success. Into such struggles, Faith enters as an important element. And of necessity it must. Faith and Hope are twin-born, and inseparable. What were a Faith which could offer no Hope to the believer? And without Faith, in the reality of that for which we labor, in the truthfulness, the power, and the love, of him who has bidden us "Work," could we have Hope? It was such united Hope and Faith that empowered Columbus to plead his cause before monarchs and scholars; that enabled him to sustain poverty, scorn and loneliness; to brave the terrors of an unknown sea, to endure the delays and fatigue of the long voyage, and the rebellious impatience of his hopeless crew. The same mighty spirit led the Pilgrim Fathers to quit their dear native England, and bear, for fourteen years, the hardships and sorrows of exile among a people of strange language and customs; and then to undertake the perils, but too well anticipated, of that wonderful voyage in the Mayflower, and a settlement in New England. We read the history of their sacrifices, their sufferings, and their patience; we wonder at their cheerfulness in the face of the gloomiest earthly prospects! And too often, we hear those who have no hope themselves, and who deem present ease and pleasure the highest good, call them fanatics who were in truth the soberest, the most intelligent, the most cultured men of their day. As long as Truth, Love, Faith and Hope remain, that little band of heroic souls shall be the representatives of the living embodiment of these virtues. It was such Hope and Faith that made the Father of his Country strong to do his appointed work, and nerved our beloved Martyr President to bear the burden of that terrible Civil War. But the power of Hope is limited by character. A hope which looks only to the acquisition of material things, or to ease and pleasure, is too often deceptive, and has easily become discouraged. But a hope founded upon the sure basis of Truth, a hope which reaches out after Immortality, and counts the attainment of spiritual perfection as the chief good, can take joyfully the spoiling of all temporal things. Such a hope the man have, he purifieth himself, as the Lord himself is pure. This Hope maketh not ashamed; and with it we cannot fail, for we dare not yield to even the bitterest discouragements lest we lose the reward promised to them that faint not.

Sad, indeed, is his case, who had no Hope, for whom the Future holds no promise, to whom toil, if toil be his lot here, means only weariness and pain, to whom all the brightness and gladness and beauty of Nature are only a mockery, whose one desire is to sleep and forget. There are such. God be thanked the number is constantly growing less. But sadder even than this is the case of the one who, equally hopeless, is willingly so; who, with everything to inspire and foster hopefulness, is content with present ease and enjoyment, and gives himself wholly to the pursuit of mere sensuous pleasure, which can delight but for the hour. Too many such there are. Oh, that they would consider the end of their ways! Reason would teach them to choose the better, if less flowery path, which is yet the path of Hope, and has promise for the life that now is, and that which is to come!

BEAUTIFUL "LAKEVIEW"

Captivates the Heart of a Toledo Man, and He Departs on the Charms of Devils Lake and Its Popular Resort.

In the Bee of last summer appeared a communication from Mr. Graves, of Toledo, on the merits of Devils Lake as a pleasure resort for the public. The very agreeable description given of that locality seemed so paradoxical to the name that I determined on the first convenient occasion to look into the situation and report the items gathered for your columns.

So far as I can learn the singular name "Devils Lake" derived its origin from the Indian legend relating to the drowning therein of a bad chief, whose disturbed spirit in times of storm would be seen in phantom shape crossing the lake with his canoe, which act was attributed to the devil by the Indians, hence the name of Devils Lake. Passing, however, from the imaginary to the real, it may be emphatically stated that the lake is both attractive and interesting, and is very desirable as a resort for recreation and pleasure. Its prominent features of interest to the public are about as follows:

Devils Lake is located in the northwest part of Lenawee county, and is reached by the Michigan & Ohio railway, whose depot is situated on the north end of the Lake. Its outline is much like the letter V. Its length is about four miles, by a maximum width of two miles, and it abounds in the choicest varieties of fish. There is now in course of construction at its north end a commodious hotel of three stories, which will be sure to secure ample patronage. The southern division, is however, by all odds, the most beautiful and attractive part of the lake, which has an oblong form whose length is about two miles, by one in width. The whole expanse of water is clear as crystal. Its surroundings of forest trees with their rich and varied foliage; the grassy slopes and the verdant crops together form a beautiful mirror in its frame, presenting a scene of landscape, and of water, which, like a panoramic vision, delights the eye, pleases the imagination, and excites in the beholder a love for the beautiful in nature. Such scenes enhance the enjoyments of life.

Here, too, the appliances of capital, of utility and of art come into play, by which to afford additional pleasure. Mr. Beardsell, of Hudson, the proprietor of the property, from which the best perspective of the lake can be obtained, has here erected a commodious hotel, with cottages adjacent for the accommodation of guests, who are amply and substantially supplied with the comforts of life at a very moderate cost. His pleasure grounds cover 40 acres, and the drives in the country around are very pleasant. In the matter of aquatic and piscatorial enjoyments it would probably be difficult to find arrangements more complete or satisfactory. Bathing houses are located on the fine sandy bottom of the lake, in which persons of either sex may quietly bath in its pure waters. There are more than fifty boats for the purpose of rowing and sailing, also two steamers, the "City of Hudson," a sidewheel, carries 250 persons, the "Little Devil," a propeller, carries 50 persons. There is also in course of construction a barge, to be towed by the steamer, when accommodation will be provided for taking 500 persons at a trip around the lake, the distance being but little short of ten miles. The propeller connects at the north end of the lake with the noon trains passing over the Michigan & Ohio, both east and west.

The name of this commodious, interesting, and popular resort of pleasure-seekers is that of the "Lake View Hotel and Grove, Beardsell's Landing." The advantages I have named are further supplemented by the enterprising proprietor obtaining telephone connections with Hudson, ten miles distant, at his own cost. Thus the guests from Toledo, Detroit, Adrian, Indianapolis and numerous other places, may hold direct converse with their families, and business associations, while enjoying a sojourn at this complete and liberally conducted establishment. The following shows its appreciation: On Monday last a message came to Mr. Beardsell from a prominent business man of Summit street Toledo, asking if accommodation could be had at Devils Lake from July 3d to the 6th for from 30 to 50 gentlemen and ladies from the city. The reply was sent, "Yes." Message then came, send the "Little Devil" to meet us at the Michigan & Ohio station on the 3d of July by the noon train going west. Here, then, is the singularity of this message. A party of gentlemen and ladies from Toledo, avow their intention of celebrating the "glorious Fourth" at "Devils Lake," and have telephoned for the "Little Devil" to assist them in getting there. According to common usage and common credence, both the name of the lake and also that of the servitor whose aid is sought at the depot, the adventure seems dark and slangerous, and full of foreboding. However, it is only in name, that is all.

It is just such resources of rest and pleasure as are here provided, that the masses of people require. The capitalists who provide them at moderate cost, and the railroads whose special rates enable the working classes occasionally to enjoy their benefits are thus doing the public an essential service, which is entitled to respect and co-operation. N. H. C.

We have just received from the enterprising publishers A. H. Andrews & Co., a most useful little volume, suggestively called "Look Within for Five Thousand Facts that Everybody Wants to Know." It contains 75 pages of condensed information on Mechanics, Statistics, History, Medicine, Astronomy, Finance, Mythology, Education, Mathematics, The Bible, Politics, Agriculture, Religion, Science, Temperance, Trade, etc., etc., in fact there seems to be something for everybody and nothing that some one will not be glad to know. It is embellished with a number of colored diagrams, and is by far the most valuable and complete Pocket Cyclopædia we have yet seen. It is offered for sale at the exceedingly low price of 15 cents, for which sum in stamps it will be sent postpaid by the publishers, A. H. Andrews & Co., Chicago.

The Chinese are said to be the most imitative race of people in existence. Americans do not fall far behind them. There are many liquid compounds having a peculiar and original color, odor or flavor by which they are recognized, and chemistry has advanced so far that it is easy, by the help of worthless ingredients, to prepare something having the semblance of the original, but without the characteristics which render it sought after. Wines and liquors of inferior quality are often by chemical process given an appearance of age and strength which they do not possess. St. Jacobs Oil has always been recognized by a peculiar color and odor, and knowing this, many attempts have been made to imitate it by preparations having no curative power. The warnings which have been uttered on this subject should be carefully heeded.

The Hot Weather.

The hot weather of mid-summer has a weakening effect, both upon body and mind. You feel absolutely incapable of doing any arduous work, and even light duties are performed languidly and unwillingly. This low state of the system causes even greater infirmity, and gives opportunity for serious disease to gain a foothold. In this condition the system is quick to respond to the reviving, quickening, and strengthening effects of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies the blood, regulates the digestive organs, and infuses fresh life and vigor into every portion of the body. People who have taken it write us saying: "It puts new life right into me." "It makes me young again." Reader, if you suffer from summer weakness, try Hood's Sarsaparilla. 100 Doses $1.

The July Magazine of American History is a remarkably strong number. It opens a new volume, and also its promised Civil War Papers. Its frontispiece is a portrait of President Lincoln. The leading article, "Washington in March and April, 1861," by Lieut.-General Charles P. Stone, is admirably presented and pertinently illustrated. The seven standing departments are splendidly sustained, and the entire number is one of the most readable and attractive ever issued. Price 50 cents a number; or $5.00 a year in advance. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

—Ladies you will find a good assortment of Summer Hats and Bonnets trimmed and untrimmed, from which to make your selections, at Mrs. N. R. Brown's. Prices to suit the times. Now is the time for Lake hats.

—Go to Ed Rowlands for the best hay rack ever sold in Tecumseh.

—I sell Hay and Stock Racks very cheap this year, at but little advance on cost of material. Call and see.

The editor of the Battle Creek Moon has been loaded with the straw that broke the camel's back, and he writes thus Parties getting job printing in job offices not connected with newspapers will hereafter be charged ten cents per line, for all local notices which they may want for socials, festivals, dances, etc. If you want the favor of such notices gratis, bring your work to the office which gives you the puff and help to support it. Don't withhold your cash patronage from a local paper that is trying to build up the city, and then expect it will help you for nothing. That is the meanest kind of cheek.

H. L. Hayward, editor of the Longmont, Colorado, Ledger, and formerly pastor of the Universalist church of this village, has been on a visiting tour of two months through the eastern states. This is what he says of the wheat crop of Michigan.

Throughout the state of Michigan, which is probably the best winter wheat state in the Union, the wheat crop is unusually fine. Only in a very few fields did we detect any spots where the plants had been winter-killed, the unusual depth of the snow having protected the young wheat from what is universally declared to have been an exceptionally severe winter. The growth is very thrifty, the heads are long, there are no indications of rust, and so far as could be determined two weeks before harvest, the yield will be considerable above the average. In this respect, Michigan is far ahead of nearly every other state in which winter wheat is grown, in most of which the wheat was badly winter-killed.

Morenci Observer: On Wednesday, July 1st, the Morenci postoffice, with many others, dropped back from a presidential office to one of the fourth class, owing to the decrease of its receipts, on account of the reduction of postage to two cents. So the postmaster, instead of a $1,000 salary per annum, now gets a commission on the stamps canceled, which will amount to a less sum. The present postmaster, Mr. G. T. Cottrell, was commissioned by President Arthur, and in view of the change just effected, it is very probable that a new appointment will soon be made by the first assistant postmaster general. The aspirants for Mr. Cottrell's position have, therefore, not been quiet within a few days. One of them is a one-legged veteran, G. P. Van Alstine, who held the office in Andy Johnson's time, and his friends are quite confident that he will again serve our community in that capacity. Another would-be mail distributor is Levi Acker, who has the influence and backing of a considerable number. But we shall soon see what we shall see.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., JULY 9, 1885.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Where did you spend the fourth?

Lon Haught and Ben Garlinghouse spent the 4th in Chicago.

Extra good bargains in hats and flowers at Mrs. N. R. Brown's.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam A. James, of Detroit, were in town over the 4th.

A goodly number of Tecumseh people went to Devils Lake on the 4th.

Dr. L. H. Goodrich, of Detroit spent Sunday with his sister, Mrs. C. M. Burlingame, in this village.

The bulk of this year's wool crop has been marketed, and only straggling offerings are now made.

Mrs. Dave Macham, who has been visiting friends in Dundee the past week, returned home Monday.

We are indebted to County Clerk Bixby for a copy of the pamphlet containing the Proceedings of the Board of Supervisors. It also contains a list of all county and township officers, and the official canvass of the November and April elections.

Fred Kloffenstein, who for so long a time held the position of foreman in Arnold's bakery, has purchased an establishment at Fremont, Ohio, and will hereafter carry on business in his own name. Fred is a genial, whole-souled fellow, and as a workman has no superior. We are sorry to lose him from among us, but our loss is the gain of Fremont, and we hope the citizens of that town will give him the patronage which he well deserves.

The Vescelius Concert was one of the finest musical entertainments to which Tecumseh people have listened in a long time. The singing of the three sisters was superb, and the other features of the program were very creditable. We regret to say that the audience was not what it should have been. It was appreciative enough, that is true, what there was of it, but for some inexplainable reason, it was very diminutive in number. It is no credit to the musical intelligence and culture of this community that so good an entertainment should be greeted with so small an audience.

The opening of the new Devils Lake House at the north end of the Lake on July 3rd and 4th was a perfect success. One hundred and two couple participated in the ball on the night of the 3rd. The music was fine and the dancers stayed until the daylight streaked the morning sky. During the day, Saturday, people were coming and going during the entire day on the different trains and by boat from across the lake and with teams from the country round about. Over two hundred and fifty people were fed there during the day and the boats were employed from morning till night. All the towns both east and west of the lake were represented, from Dundee to Homer, and the visitors were well pleased with the house and accommodations received.

Jules Venere, of Cleveland, O., was in town the 4th.

Will Sutfin went to Bay City on the 4th to shoot off his fire-crackers.

Marvin Fuller, of Adrian, has been visiting friends in Tecumseh the past week.

Henry Werner, of Jackson county, is visiting his brother John for a few days.

The 4th, of July social at the M. E. church was well patronized, netting $25 for the society.

This vicinity was favored by a very fine rain on Monday evening, doing an immense amount of good.

Oscar Heck will fill the pulpit of the Baptist church on Sunday next, and an interesting discourse may be looked for.

Will Scofield has purchased Hobe Bird's interest in the dray business, and will hereafter do your toteing in great shape.

E. C. Williams returned from New York City on Saturday last and reports having had a very successful business trip.

Miss Jennie Frazer, who has been teaching at Lake Linden for the past two years, returned to her home in this village on Tuesday.

The Episcopal social will be held this evening, at the residence of J. F. Hicks. Ice cream and cake served. All are cordially invited to attend.

The order of Good Templars has a total of 7000 lodges with a membership of about 300,000. The ritual of the order is published in ten different languages.

The annual meeting of the Southern Michigan Medical Society will be held at the court house, in Hillsdale, on Tuesday, July 14th, beginning at 10 o'clock, A. M.

Five hundred and thirty-five tickets were sold at the L. S. & M. S. R. R. office in this village to parties who celebrated elswhere. 444 of the number were for Adrian. The M. & O. sold about 70.

We are glad to announce that Miss Stella Cleveland, one of our compositors, who has been sick with fever for the past four weeks is now on the road to recovery and will soon take her place among the HERALD force.

Tecumseh came very near having a fire to celebrate the 4th with. The dry goods boxes in the rear of Strong & McNair's store caught fire on the night of the 3d, from fire-crackers, but it was put out before it had attained much headway.

The annual distribution of prizes by the Detroit Commercial Advertiser (in which some Tecumseh people had an interest) happened Wednesday of last week, on a river steamboat. A. D. McDonald, of Chicago, is the owner of ticket No. 43,242, which drew the capital prize of $2,000.

The Dundee Reporter says the business men and farmers thereabouts are discussing the question of holding a fair this year, and the proposition meets with very general favor. There is no reason why Dundee should not have a fair, and have a good one, and we trust it will not end in talk.

The Adrian Record wants the city fathers to pass an ordinance prohibiting singing on the streets in order to put a quietus on the Salvation army. If such an ordinance had been passed some weeks ago the several young men who were fined for disturbing the peace while serenading one evening, would be able to lay aside their winter garments and blossom out in a new spring suit.

The Adrian Record says: Ex-President Durgin, late of Hillsdale college is just now the beneficiary of a great deal of free advertising through the state papers, he having been arrested and fined five dollars for failing to make returns of marriages to the county clerk as the law provides shall be done. Why it is that ministers who should be law abiding if anybody, time and again fail to make these returns, is something very strange. It was only by sharp letters and final threats to prosecute that certain ministers of this county were induced by T. M. Hunter, their county clerk, to make their returns. Durgin's fine just spoils the profits of an average Ohio marriage on the Michigan side of the line.

It is said that sparrows tackle the 17 year locust and get away with him. If there is anything that flies less swiftly than a scandal rumor that a sparrow will not tackle, it must be something newer than a locust.—Adrian Record. If all reports are true a sparrow wouldn't be a good sized mouthful for one of these 17-year locusts. The following touching on their masticating propensities is vouched for by a western man: Back in '74 an old brahma rooster of mine swallowed the first locust that lit near him, but that was the only one he ever got 'cause the other locusts buried him six inches deep and eat him up so quick that the one he'd just swallowed hopped out of his crop as lively as a cricket. Stranger, if ye'd go west and talk about chickens getting fat on locusts they'd laugh at ye an' call ye a tenderfoot.—Hudson Gazette.

John J. Orr and family celebrated in Jackson.

Excuse us for all oversights the "boss" is away.

Joe Burroughs, of Clinton, was in town Tuesday.

Prosecuting Attorney L. H. Salsbury was in town Tuesday.

Geo. W. Stacy, of Buffalo, arrived in town on Tuesday noon.

Charlie Kennedy, of Battle Creek, is visiting friends in town this week.

Mr. & Mrs. Wm. Monro, of Morenci, were the guests of E. Hand over Sunday.

Miss Lu. Reynolds, of Clinton, was visiting Tecumseh friends last Tuesday.

Alf. James attended a meeting of the building committee of the new court house at Adrian on Tuesday.

The Tecumseh "kid base ball nine" will play a Clinton nine to-morrow, and an Adrian nine a week from to-morrow.

Co. C went to Adrian thirty-one strong last Saturday morning, and presented a fine appearance. They didn't come home quite so strong.

Last Sunday being the second anniversary of their wedding, Mrs. E. M. Conklin presented the Doctor with a fine bouncing boy, who will in a short time call him pa. The mother, child and the Doctor are all doing well.

Hudson Gazette: With 2,000,000 celery plants and 40 acres of cabbages growing finely at Tecumseh, the editor ought to be handsomely remembered this season.

Bless you, neighbor, don't be downhearted, there's plenty of cabbage-heads in Hudson. You're a-head of Tecumseh in that respect.

Detroit News: At Tecumseh wool is a drug on the market, buyers offering worse than panic prices. A fine clip of wool sold at Clinton Saturday for 15 and 20 cents, the buyers assorting it. Two farmers in Macon drew their wool to Adrian one day last week, and were obliged to draw it back to Tecumseh and take what they could get.

Adrian Record: Prof. Hathaway, the tarred and feathered reporter of the Toledo Democrat is making a tour of Michigan, and seems to take pride in relating the story of his adventure. He says he is offered $3,000 to settle, but wants $5,000. Young man listen to a voice from Michigan;—you take that $3,000 and be mad at yourself for not being able to say "yes" as quick as you ought to.

Rev. Geo. W. Hudson has gone to visit relatives and his old home near Weston, West Va. He expects to be absent for three Sundays. He has arranged for the supply of his pulpit as follows: Sunday morning, July 12, Rev. Mr. Vincent, of Tecumseh; evening, Rev. A. B. Storms, of Franklin. Sunday July 19, Rev. Mr. Price, of Tecumseh in the morning, and Rev. J. M. Kerridge, of Clinton, in the evening. Sunday, July 26, Rev. G. D. Perry in the morning, and Rev. Wm. Q. Burnett in the evening.

S. C. Stacy, editor of the HERALD, Miss Loana Stacy, and C. F. Field, of the News, left Tecumseh on Monday to attend the meeting of the Michigan Press Association at Traverse City. The railroads of the state have kindly offered transportation to the "quill" fraternity, free of charge, while citizens of Traverse City, Petosky, and Charlevoix have volunteered the rather gigantic task of endeavoring to see the fraternity and their ladies hospitably fed and cared for. A special train was run from Monroe to Traverse City for the accommodation of the editors of the south part of the state.

On Tuesday afternoon, William Carroll, who had just completed a twenty days sentence in the county jail for drunkenness, was arrested by John M. Hibbard, on a complaint of Strong & McNair for obtaining goods under false pretense. Justice Burridge gave him a hearing and bound him over to the circuit court. Carroll also obtained a watch at Adamson Bros., claiming that L. C. Miller, of Macon, ordered him to procure it there, which was also false. He is the same party who stabbed Dr. Hanse several years ago, and is evidently a hard case and the sooner he gets a long sentence the better it will be for the community.

The fashion seems to be growing to remove the front fences. If it was generally followed, so that a square or street presented a uniform appearance, there might be something to commend it, but to see one lot in a block without a fence, and the others neatly fenced can scarcely be called an improvement. Miss Sarah Jewett, the author of "Deephaven," "A Country Doctor" etc., writes of this as follows "People do not know what they lose when they make way with the reserve, the separateness, the sanctity of the front yard. It is like writing down the family secrets for any one to read; it is like having everybody call you by your first name, and sitting in any pew in church, like having your house in the middle of the road, to take away the fence, which slight as it may be, is a fortification around your home. More things than one, may come in without being asked. We Americans had better build more fences than take away from our lives.

There are fourteen prisoners in the county jail.

Flo Deuel is sticking type in the News office this week.

Hon. B. L. Baxter, of Battle Creek, is home for a few days.

Sixteen marriages were recorded in the county clerk's office on Tuesday.

John Anderson has purchased a fine new Columbia bicycle and is learning to ride the animal.

There were three thousand visitors to the Free Methodist camp meeting at Blissfield last week.

Lawrence Bauer has secured the agency of the Washington Fire Insurance Co., of Boston, Mass.

Mrs. Truman D. McKinney, left Tecumseh yesterday morning for a few days visit with friends at Belleville.

Ed. Williamson arrived home from New York just in time to be presented with a bouncing girl baby by his wife. Ed. thinks he will go again.

When one small man like J. D. Arner, of Ridgeway, takes a trip to the lakes accompanied by six young ladies all at once, the other fellows don't hardly stand a fair show.

Mrs. F. G. Foster is visiting her cousin Mrs. D. W. Clark, on her way to N. Y., from the City of Victoria, Mexico, where she has been visiting her son for the past year and a half.

The board of health for the village have ordered that all cases of scarlet fever, diptheria, and other contagious diseases hereafter reported, shall be placarded and quarantined for at least 30 days.
D. T. HALL, chairman.

An effort is being made to set the old organization of the Lenawee Co., Soldiers' and Sailors' Association on its feet again. Two delegations from each G. A. R. Post in the county are requested to meet in this village to-morrow, to assist in the reorganization.

At a regular meeting of Tecumseh Lodge, No. 34, I. O. O. F., the following officers were elected for the ensuing quarter:
N. G.—J. W. Wooden.
V. G.—J. M. Hibbard.
P. S.—T. Cummins.
R. S.—Wm. Smallidge.
Treas.—C. E. Williamson.

On Monday last J. E. McCollum, of Clinton, succeeded in effecting a settlement with his creditors and the business is again in his own hands and name, and the assignee discharged. We are glad to note this fact as J. E. McCollum is one of the best business men in our neighboring village.

The Universalist people of Manchester church, hold a Basket grove Meeting next Sunday, July 12th, on the farm of Lyman Baldwin. Services at 11 o'clock in the morning and at 2 in the afternoon. Rev. J. M. Getchell of this place will be the attending minister All will be welcomed.

The summer session of the Normal school of Adrian College will doubtless be largely attended. The session opens July 20th. The advantages offered for summer work will be appreciated. President Stephens reports already a number of applicants for rooms in the college building.

There is more than one way to celebrate the glorious 4th, and Geo. Zimmerman Miss Allie Beerman concluded that the proper way for them to celebrate would be to take a trip to Blissfield and get married, which they accordingly did. The bride and groom returned to Tecumseh Tuesday and will immediately set up housekeeping. May they live to celebrate many more fourths.

Science will publish on July 10 a sanitary number giving special attention to water and the soil in their relations to the contagious diseases. One of the longer articles gives the history of the water-supply and the sewer-system of Chicago in relation to the health of the city. Its reviews of valuable books will contain new light upon the longevity of the different classes of society, the comparative exposure of the poor and the rich to infectious diseases, and the relation of consumption to age.

Adrian Times: The Emmet Rifles, of Jackson, have been assigned to the first regiment. Other changes in the state troops are made as follows Muskegon to the first regiment, Grand Rapids to the second regiment, Menominee and Houghton to the third regiment. The first battalion at Detroit, companies D of Monroe, F of Ypsilanti and the company of M. G. Borgman, of Detroit are assigned to the fourth regiment. This makes a vacancy in the colonelcy of the fourth regiment, which will necessitate a new election.

Adrian Press: A Hudson lady rented the grand stand one day for the hoss races, or at least one seat thereon, and was promptly on hand to enjoy the sport all day, and when she arrived home, she discovered to her horror, that she had made a mistake and put her over-skirt on the wrong side out. She has been under the doctor's care ever since. Hudson ladies are very particular as to propriety and neatness, and any deviation from regulation standard is apt to cause deep annoyance. We don't think, however, the lady need take it to heart. Horse races excuse most everything.

A hen party went to Sand Lake this morning.

Nearly every cottage at Sand Lake is now occupied.

Trotting and running races at Bills' track this afternoon.

Car load of watermelons went over the branch this morning.

Will Bidwell has accepted a position in the office of C. A. Slayton's warehouse.

Work was commenced on the foundation for the new engine house this morning.

Prof. Haight, of the Alton, Ill, schools is visiting his cousin Mrs. A. W. Slayton.

Jas. Lowry and Snell & Wallinger have had their plate glass fronts ornamented with new signs.

Zack Snell's new house on the corner of Kilbuck and Ononda streets, will be ready for occupancy in a short time.

J. J. Daly, the shoe man, paid a visit to Chicago last week, and from the amount of goods he brought back with him one would judge that a number of Chicago shoe men needed money.

When you wish to visit Detroit go to Raisin Center and take the Wabash morning train which arrives in Detroit at 9:35 A. M.; returning leaves Detroit at 5:00 P. M. connecting with the M. & O. evening train at Britton.

Detroit Journal: The Adrian Times spitefully records the fact that a Detroiter was sent to Clinton to die. Detroit physicians declaring that he had but a few brief days to live Upon reaching Clinton, Dr. Cameron, a local physician, who probably would not recognize a bacillus on the street, and who has no acquaintance with bocteria, took charge of the case and cured the man in three months.

ON THE WING.

THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO.
(Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.) Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

WARREN LELAND,
whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises
of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of
Ayer's Sarsaparilla.
Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.
Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.
Mr. LELAND has personally used
for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.
We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.
Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

The Life is the Blood—Prevent Disease—Surgery the Last Resort—A Telling Letter.
Here is a fact for you to think over, viz: Medical Science proves that diseases, no matter how great a variety they seem to have, proceed from comparatively few causes. It is for this reason that some single medicines relieve or cure so wide a range of complaints—some of them appearing almost directly opposite to their natures. When a medical preparation acts at once upon the digestive and urinary organs, and also purifies the blood, the list of difficulties subject to its control is astonishing. But while many things are said to possess this power, those which actually do exert it are very rare.
It is conceded that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y., is the most effective preparation now in use for all diseases arising from a foul or impure state of the circulation. Hence it is more than likely that if the writer of the following letter had habitually taken "Favorite Remedy" ten years ago, he would never have suffered from cancer.
PITTSFIELD, Mass., March 22, 1884.
Dr. David Kennedy,
Dear Sir—About six years ago I was obliged to resort to external treatment for the removal of a cancerous growth on my lip. On my return home I became sensible that my blood needed a thorough cleansing. My whole system too required toning up. While casting about for the best medicine to do this, your "FAVORITE REMEDY" was so highly recommended in my hearing that I resolved to try it. I did so and the result surprised me, it was effected so quickly and completely. I soon got over the depression produced by the operation and since the "Favorite Remedy," which I have continued to take in small doses, has kept me in such good health and strength as I never had before, nor expected to have. It is the best blood purifier in the world. I am sure of that. Yours, etc.,

CARE OF THE SICK.

Poultices, Plasters and Blisters—How They are Prepared.

Poultices are used in so many cases that it is very important to know how to make and apply them properly. They are intended to convey warmth and moisture to the parts affected, and so must not be made too dry, nor allowed to grow cold before being put on. A wet, sloppy poultice is almost as objectionable as a dry, hard one, and a little care will enable one to attain the happy medium. Flaxseed meal is the best material for a poultice; it is not always at hand in a country house, and then a substitute must be found for it. If many poultices are likely to be required, as in peritonitis, or inflammation of the bowels, it is well to buy a few pounds, for nothing can satisfactorily replace it. If it has not been applied to an open surface where there is a discharge of matter, the flaxseed can be scraped from the cotton and heated again, adding a little water if too stiff, or more meal if there is not enough. To make it, have ready a sufficient quantity of boiling water in a sauce-pan (two teacupfuls will make a good-sized poultice), and into this stir enough of the meal to make a soft, thick paste. By stirring in one direction, and putting in the meal gradually, there will be no lumps. It need not boil after the flaxseed is in. Have ready a piece of old cotton, about two inches larger each way than the poultice is to be when applied, and a small piece of thin muslin. Dip a spoon in boiling water, and spread the flaxseed evenly on the cotton, leaving at least two inches of margin on all sides; lay the muslin on top of the poultice, and fold the margin neatly over it. This prevents the possibility of the flaxseed oozing out. No poultice or plaster should ever be directly applied to the skin; there should always be a layer of muslin, old linen, fine cambric, or some thin fabric, between, to prevent the skin from being soiled, and to make it more easy to remove the application.

Carrots, boiled soft and smoothly mashed, make a good poultice, and turnips prepared in the same way are sometimes used. These must be spread quickly, or they will cool too rapidly. Onions boiled in water to which a little vinegar has been added, make an excellent poultice; they should be crushed with a spoon when spreading them on the cotton. Indian meal makes a tolerable substitute for flaxseed, and is improved by the addition of a third part of slippery elm. Bread is a good material for a small poultice; it should be stale and only the crumbs used. Crumble it between the fingers, and pour over it enough boiling milk or water to moisten it thoroughly. When a poultice is intended to relieve pain, a small quantity of laudanum is sprinkled on the surface. If it is applied when there is an offensive discharge, powered charcoal is used in the same way, or a tablespoonful of carbolic acid solution is put into the water with which it is made. A poultice ought to be removed every two hours at least, and covered with a piece of oiled silk, India rubber cloth, or several thicknesses of flannel, to retain the heat. Before applying it, test it with the finger; if it feels uncomfortably warm, it is certainly too hot to lay on a sick person. When a gentle stimulant is required, a mustard plaster is generally used. Equal parts of mustard and wheat flour is a good proportion. They should be mixed to a smooth paste with warm water—boiling water destroys the essential oil of the mustard and renders it less efficacious—and then spread as thinly as possible on a piece of stout cotton, covered with muslin and applied. In ten minutes a corner should be raised, the state of the skin inspected and, if very red, the plaster removed. It is not desirable to raise a blister, as one made by mustard is more painful than any other. It is said that when mixed with the white of an egg, it will not blister. Flannel dipped in vinegar and thickly sprinkled with red pepper, makes a stimulating application, that is also free from this objection. An admirable plaster for a swelled breast is made by melting together a piece of resin the size of an egg and a lump of mutton tallow as large as a nutmeg; let them remain on the stove for an hour, and when taken from the fire, stir in the yelk of an egg. Have ready a piece of cotton the proper size, cut round and with a hole in the middle; spread the mixture on it, cover with part of an old handkerchief, shaped like the cotton, and apply warm to the breast. It usually gives great relief, and may be left on three or four days.

When a doctor orders a blister, he generally sends one ready prepared from an apothecary's shop, or a bottle of blistering fluid, which only requires to be painted on the spot where the blister is to be raised. It must not be applied where the skin is broken; the surface should be washed, and, if not too tender, rubbed with a rough towel. The time required for it to rise varies in different persons; it is usually from six to twelve hours. If it is very slow, it can be hastened by putting on a warm poultice; the vesicles will then be larger, and less painful. When the blister is raised, if it is intended to let it heal, the skin must not be removed, but snipped carefully in one place with a pair of sharp scissors, and the fluid that has accumulated allowed to escape, then dressed with a piece of soft linen spread with lard or vaseline. If it is to be kept open, the skin must be carefully cut around the edge and taken off, the surface being dressed with any stimulating ointment the physician orders. In either case the place must be washed every morning by gently squeezing tepid water over it from a sponge, a basin or thickly folded towel being placed underneath, to absorb the moisture. The ointment must be applied again as at first.—Elizabeth Robinson Scovil, in Country Gentleman.

—A woman of Middleton, Conn., who had become exasperated at an eagle that had stolen her chickens and pigeons saw him taking a siesta the other day after lunching on a spring chicken. She got down a double-barreled shotgun, pointed it at the eagle, shut both eyes and fired both barrels. She brought down the bird, which is to be stuffed as a trophy.—Hartford Courant.

THE COMMERCIAL TRAVELER.

A Drummer Who Was Not the Gay and Festive Creature He is Usually Thought to Be.

He was a traveling-man. That fact was conveyed to the other passengers on the train by his good clothes and comfortable air of well-to-do-ativeness as well as by his general bearing of being accustomed to luxuries. He had the best fare at the best hotels, and his employer's money paid for it as an investment that would return sure dividends. For the rest, he was absent from his family nearly all the time, traveling night and day in close, hot, ill-ventilated cars, worked like a machine at every town on his route, and earned a better salary than any professional man of his acquaintance. He was the first to make up a purse for a widow or stranded fellow-traveler, and when he read the newspaper stories of the gay and festive drummer he wondered why in the course of his travels he never met any of the craft. The men he knew were, like himself, of honorable record, often inconveniencing themselves to help one another on the way through.

There was a stir at a station, and two pretty girls came aboard. They laughed and giggled; threw kisses to their friends at the depot; gave silly messages and good-byes, and, as the train started, they took a seat behind the commercial traveler. There were other seats vacant, but they preferred this, and rustled into it with a series of little shrieks and giggles.

"Did you see Tom Barlow watching us, Nellie? Te-he-he."

"He'll be there to meet us when we go back, see if he isn't, Kittie! Ha! ha!"

"Say, he's a drummer," giggled Nellie, hunching her friend toward the front seat.

"Too awfully swell, ain't he? Oh, my!"

The traveler did not make any answer. His [illegible] fine and pretentious as the [illegible] man who does his duty and o[illegible] anything has a right to be, w[illegible] glanced down over his eyes, his lips were compressed, and he replied by no look or motion to the rude speech of the merry girls.

"Must be awfully stuck up," whispered Nellie, but not so low but that the man on the seat before her could hear distinctly.

"Doesn't notice common people," answered Kittie, with a toss of her head.

These were young ladies, dear readers. Not hobble-de-hoy schoolgirls or coarse, ill-bred hoydens. They moved in the best society, and their respective fathers and mothers would have been greatly astonished to learn that their daughters flirted. But then, fathers and mothers are usually the last to know what is going on among their own young people.

"W-would you be so kind, sir, as to tell us what time it is?" asked Nellie, in a little, meek, far-away voice, while her companion tittered and looked out of the window.

Both the young ladies wore watches, as was patent to an observer, but the gentleman addressed could do nothing less than answer so direct a question. This he did in a brief manner, and with a voice that noticeably trembled.

"Poor thing, he was quite overcome," whispered Kittie, audibly. "I'm going to want this window put up pretty soon."

"Allow me," said the traveling man respectfully, and the disconcerted young lady blushed and simpered, and sat in the draught without protest.

The next move was made by the gentleman. He took from his pocket a photograph and inspected it long and sadly. Tears welled into his eyes, his face flushed, and he returned it to his pocket.

The two young ladies did not see the photograph, at least not to recognize whether it was man or woman, but they te-he'd and simpered and even speculated in a low voice as to who it might be—wife or sweetheart.

"Don't tell me he's married," cried Kittie in a loud whisper. "He hasn't the courage to pop the question."

"That was his grandmother's picture," chimed in Nellie. "Good boy! carries it with him so that the old lady will hear of it and leave him something in her will."

Then they giggled in chorus, and the train drew up at a station where some very anxious looking faces were pressing forward as if in search of some one.

The commercial traveler caught up his satchel and slung it over his shoulder; then he took the photograph he had been looking at out of his pocket, and turned to the two young ladies who began to feel a little uncomfortable at his manner.

"That is the picture of my little daughter," he said, holding up the counterfeit of a lovely, smiling child of six years; "she is very ill, and I am summoned home, perhaps to see her die. But let me tell you that I would rather a thousand times know, at this moment, that the breath of life had forever passed her sweet lips, than to think she could ever grow up into a silly, dishonest woman, tempting and toying with souls to feed her on wicked vanity."

Almost the next moment they saw him on the platform, and a fair woman hung on his arm, and his face lighted with pleasure at her words. But the two sank back out of sight, enraged, mortified, yet conscious that they had found, in one traveling man, an honest-minded friend who had dared to give them a word of needful warning.—Mrs. Mayne, in Detroit Free Press.

—Maine papers say that a Bath boarding mistress surprised one of her boarders, who was learning to play on the banjo, by reducing the price of his board on the ground that his singing and playing had frightened away all the rats. The compliment discouraged the young man so much that he has given up practice.

—The United States Consulate at Nogales, Sonora, Mexico, is without a flag. This is probably the only case on record where a branch of the United States Consular Department is not represented by the National ensign.—Chicago Times.

SUBDUING AN ELEPHANT.

Swinging a Recalcitrant Quadruped in the Air to Bring Him to Reason.

It took a dozen men five days of last week to break the spirit of a vicious elephant in the winter quarters of Adam Forepaugh's menagerie. Early in February one of Mr. Forepaugh's European agents bought four elephants and shipped them to this country. The huge beasts reached New York two weeks ago, and were at once transferred to Philadelphia. Three were docile, but the other, Ajax, is a tusker, eight feet high and vicious.

On reaching this city he became sullen, but Jack Forepaugh, who has charge of the winter quarters, believing that the brute would become good natured in a day or two, hitched him to a post and locked him up for the night. A few hours' later Ajax broke his chains, butted the iron-bound door of his room, and rushed into an apartment in which a dozen of the more peaceable elephants live. He attacked a performing elephant named Bazie and a desperate fight began. Five or six of the small elephants broke loose. Their frightened cries soon excited every animal in the buildings, and the air was filled with roars that aroused the neighborhood. The night keepers were afraid to attempt to separate Ajax and Bazie, who were trumpeting and charging at each other with great fury. When their huge bodies came together at the end of every rush the shock could be felt throughout the place.

Jack Forepaugh was sent for, but before he arrived the watchman discovered that Ajax and Bazie were so engaged with each other that they did not heed what was going on about them. The doors were opened, and all the elephants except the fighters were driven out. By the time this was accomplished Mr. Forepaugh arrived. He has had thirty years' experience with wild animals and stands no more in fear of an elephant than an ordinary person does of a dog. Grasping an elephant hook—a spike and a hook on a handle—he ran between the furious beasts and ordered Bazie back. Bazie obeyed, but the blood of the new elephant was up and he charged on the man, who eluded him and fastened the hook in the beast's ear. Ajax turned and bore down upon him. The trainer stabbed him with a spike and dodged behind a post. Ajax butted the post down as though it was a reed. The other men ran to Mr. Forepaugh's assistance and assailed the elephant from so many points that he paused irresolute. During that pause a chain was passed about one of his hind legs and fastened to an anchored ring. This rendered him almost helpless. His other legs were hobbled and he was left alone until daylight, Bazie being driven off to another part of the quarters.

On Tuesday morning Ajax was as sullen and vicious as ever. Bad elephants sometimes remain in this mood for days, and no man can approach them with safety. Until such an elephant's spirit is broken, he is worse than useless. Steps were at once taken to convince Ajax that he must obey his keepers. Of the thirty-six elephants under Forepaugh's care none was as hard to subdue as Ajax.

The work of conquering the proud spirit of Ajax began at nine o'clock on Tuesday morning and ended shortly before noon yesterday. Beating has no effect upon a mad elephant. It only renders him more stubborn and wicked. The breaker's only hope is to convince such an animal that he is powerless against man. That accomplished, the beast becomes as docile as elephants ever are. On Tuesday morning four hawsers were passed through immense pulleys attached to beams under the roof. Then a set of harness, shaped something like a monster shawl strap, was fastened about Ajax's defiant body. The leather straps, which were three-ply thick, covered small chains. All the leather plates were copper-riveted and a foot wide. Ajax looked as though he were in armor after being encased. Three hours were spent in getting the harness on him, and during the job he slightly injured two of the keepers.

Through iron rings, supported by great chains, were passed the hawsers. Then a dozen men grasped two of the lines of rope that passed through pulleys and before Ajax knew it his hind feet were six feet above the ground, and he stood on his front ones in the most approved performing elephant style. For a moment he was paralyzed with astonishment, but surprise gave place to fury when he appreciated the ridiculous position he was in. He surged and trumpeted and flapped his ears, but all to no purpose.

When his struggles subsided some of the men ran off with the front ropes, and in a jiffy Ajax's body was suspended in the air. He made the most frantic efforts to tear the belting off with his trunk, but the chains between his fore legs and around his shoulders prevented it. There the monster brute hung as helpless as an infant. He was free to kick and plunge and butt the air as much as he pleased. From time to time he was lowered, so that he might rest his legs, but none of the men were allowed to approach or worry him. In the evening he was lowered and fed, and allowed to spend the night on the ground, thinking over the indignities that had been put upon him.

After his breakfast on the following morning he was trussed up as before. He resisted, but his efforts were unavailing. He was a stout-spirited brute, however, and the second day's punishment only seemed to increase his rage. When he came down to supper he was the maddest elephant that ever trumpeted in Forepaugh's winter quarters. At the sight of the harness on Wednesday he became greatly excited. Mr. Forepaugh said he was "coming to his senses." This, however, did not prevent him from being hoisted up again. He surged about less in his comfortable spring on Thursday, but otherwise he was as stubborn and dangerous as ever. An anchor was sunk five feet in the ground and covered with earth in another part of the quarters. Only a ring was exposed. Ajax's forelegs were hitched to the ring on Friday morning. Ropes were attached to his hind legs, which were then drawn out, leaving him "spread-eagled" on his stomach on straw.

SMELLING AN EARTHQUAKE.

Abnormal Development of a Sea Captain's Olfactories.

"We was anchored in the harbor of Manilla," said a bronzed and weather-beaten sailor, as he stretched his legs under the table and looked meditatively at a glass of beer which had just been placed before him. "It were in the ship Albert, as I shipped into fur the voyage and our old man's name was Cole. The old man was the best I ever see at scentin' a blow. Why, bless ye, that nose of his were better than any barometer that ever was made. Many a time I've seen him a-walking up and down the poop with the sky as blue and wind as fair as anything. Suddenly he'd stop, cock up his nose and give a sort of snuff like. Then he'd snuff all 'round the compass and sing out for to shorten sail and get ready for a blow. And the blow came, too. The old man used to say he sometimes lied, but he never made a mistake.

"Well, as I was a saying, we was anchored in the harbor of Manilla. It was the most beautifullest day you ever see. Not enough wind to ripple the water, and not a cloud in the sky. The old man was ashore. Bimeby he came aboard. As he stepped over the side he stopped and gave a great snuff. Then he snuffed harder and harder all 'round the compass. Then he looked scared like and rushed below to look at his barometer. He brought the barometer up on deck and placed it where he could keep his eye on it, and began to get the ship ready for a typhoon, for that was what he thought were a-comin'. The barometer didn't go down a bit, but that didn't fool the old man. He sent down the sky sail and royal yards, bent on purventer backstays, put double gaskets on all the sails 'cepting the fore and main tawps'ls, and did every thing he could think of to get the ship in condition for a typhoon. We overhauled the sheets, halyards, buntlins, clewlins and braces of the fore and main tawps'ls, and fixed the gaskets so as we could get um off in about two shakes of a lamb's tail, fur you see we wanted to be able to get sail on to her quick to keep her off shore if so be as she would drag her anchors. We put out both anchors and all the chain we had, and it was a powerful lot I can tell you.

"Well, that night there want any sign of a blow—just as calm and pleasant as it had been, and there was the old man a-walkin' up and down the deck purty much all night a-lookin' at that barometer, which never moved an inch. The next morning the barometer did go down a little, and the old man looked actu'lay pleased, fur you see he'd rather be in the biggest blow that ever was than be caught at a mistake in smellin' bad weather. Well, about noon that day, while we were at dinner, there come a dull rumblin' sound, and the ship began to tremble all over like as if she had struck a rock. Then she began to go up, up, and we rushed out of the foc'sle to see a great tidal wave sweeping into the harbor and on shore the dust and bricks and trees was a-flyin' round in great shape. We was all pretty well scared, but fortunately we had out so much chain that we rode the wave in safety. In the midst of the confusion I saw the old man clinging for dear life to the fiferail and heard him shout: 'A earthquake, by thunder; I thought 'twas a typhoon.'"—N. Y. Tribune.

UNDER THE MICROSCOPE.

How an Expert Cleared a Woman of the Charge of Murder.

"The only instance on record when the blood of two persons was compared in a criminal trial," said Dr. Piper to a Call reporter, yesterday, "was in a murder case in Chicago. The comparison settled the innocence of the woman on trial for her life. The story of the bloody transaction is as follows: A comely woman, with $20,000, married a man in Chicago, and placed her snug little fortune in his business. In the course of time he began to abuse her, and finally she decided to appeal for a divorce. The double calamity of losing a woman to beat and the withdrawal of her $20,000 from his business made the brute furious, and the next morning he was found dead in one corner of his bedchamber, a bullet having gone through his heart. His wife was found wounded, in another part of the room. She said that her husband had come home the night before in a rage and began to abuse her while she was in bed; that he hit her on the head with the butt of his revolver while her head was on the pillow, and spattered blood over the linen, that she jumped up, and be shot her, inflicting a slight flesh wound in her side, she then rushed at him, and snatching the revolver from him, shot him through the heart. He reeled to the corner where he was found and died. The prosecution did not believe her story, and set up the theory that she had shot him while he was asleep and dragged him to the corner, and then inflicted the wound on herself. The carpet where the dead man lay was saturated with blood. According to the theory of the prosecution the blood on the pillow was his also. I put sections of the pillow with blood upon it under the microscope, and drew on a card-board the shape of the corpuscles, enlarged about two thousand diameters. I then put the blood on the carpet under the microscope in the same way. The comparison was wonderful. The corpuscles on the pillow were bright, round, and clean, they were beautiful. The corpuscles on the carpet were large and disfigured, the result of disease. The comparison settled that question at once. The blood corpuscles were as different as day and night, and sustained the woman's account of the shooting. She was acquitted on that and other evidence.

"As between human blood and dog's blood, the microscope enables the expert to determine precisely whether a specimen is from a human being or a dog. But it is impossible to determine between human blood and a hog's blood. This fact convicted one man that I know of. He claimed that the blood on his clothes was dog's blood. I was able to show that it was not dog's blood; but if he had said that it was hog's blood I could not have contradicted the statement."—San Francisco Call.

LAMPS OF VARIOUS SHADES.

Ornamental Oil Lamps that Are Fast Taking the Place of Gas.

"Lamps in place of gas? I can not say that the question of economy in light comes into the question," said a large dealer in lamps and gas fixtures on Washington, near Boylston street; "but the handsome lamps which are in the market to-day are the fashion, and of course people must have them. They form an exceedingly pretty table ornament, and on this account are very popular."

"You are manufacturing some very elaborate patterns of lamps now," was suggested.

"Yes; the styles are constantly improving and some of them are very elaborate. Now here is a lamp decorated with a delicate design of foliage in drabs, grays and soft greens, and the shade, you perceive, matches the lamp. Then here are others of various patterns. The very latest designs are in hammered metals, brass or copper, with duplex burner."

"Are these lamps expensive?"

"On the contrary, they are remarkably cheap. The cost has declined, within the past two or three years, in proportion as their popularity has increased. Lamps which formerly cost five or six dollars can now be bought for three and a-half or four dollars, and some are sold even less. A very handsome lamp can now be bought for three dollars."

"What class of people buy them?"

"All classes, but chiefly people of moderate means. Still almost all the wealthy and fashionable families have one of these handsome lamps upon their library table, and they are always lighted in the evening to furnish light to read by. The light from an oil-lamp well shaded is conceded by all to be far softer and more grateful to the eyes than gas light. On this account the lamps are rapidly superseding the old-fashioned drop-light. In fact the sale of drop-lights is rapidly growing less. We are to-day selling only about one-third as many as we were a few years ago. Economy has, of course, something to do with this; for an argand drop-light burns a great deal of gas, and oil is cheap. The very best of oil costs but a trifle, and the use of oil exclusively easily solves the question of light for people of moderate means. But I think that the main reason for the rapid exclusion of drop-lights and the substitution of oil is the superior light to be obtained and the greater beauty of the lamp. It is not easy to ornament a drop-light elaborately, or in fact to work any fixtures for gas into ornamental shapes. But lamps are susceptible of such an infinite variety of shapes and such a plentitude of ornamentation that they are far more pleasing to the eye."

"The use of lamps at the seashore and in country villas accounts for much of the demand for these articles. In places where gas is not obtainable, oil must be used as a substitute. We have fitted up many elegant seaside residences with lamps and lamp-fixtures in a very elaborate manner. Lamp chandeliers are used in these houses to a great extent. Some of these are very ornamental, more so than gas chandeliers. Then we have also side lights for stairways, bath-rooms and other similar places, so that a dwelling thoroughly fitted with modern lamps is really more elegantly fitted than if gas were used."

"What are the sales of illuminating oils for family use as compared with those of a few years ago?" was asked of a large oil merchant.

"The sales are constantly increasing. Mechanics now use oil almost exclusively, and among the great middle class its use is increasing every year. Why should it not be so? The oils of to-day are so excellent and so cheap withal that the people are beginning to regard it as folly to spend money for gas bills when they can procure a far better light at a much less cost."—Boston Globe.

AN ASTUTE CANINE.

Funny Story About a San Francisco Dog—A Dog That Knew What was Needed.

"You talk about dogs," said the Judge, "you talk about dogs—I can tell you the funniest story about a dog."

"Did you know the dog?" said the doctor.

"I did."

"Was it a terrier, or a pointer, or a bull-dog?"

"It was a Dandie Dinmont."

"Good," said the doctor; "they're a very truthful breed."

"This dog belonged to a friend of mine who used always to take him out with him."

"A bad habit," put in the doctor; "you should never let a dog know too much."

"The dog used to wait outside for him when he went in to call on a friend. One night they were a very merry party and they kept it up late. My friend got very drunk. The dog finally got restless and began to howl. A champagne bottle just passed his nose and he smelt it and shut up. About two o'clock in the morning my friend came out. He said good-night, shut the door, walked in by the garden gate all over the flower-beds, and finally unable to get out, he lay down on a rose-bush and went to sleep. The dog watched by him till the milkman came along in the morning, picked him up and took him home."

"That's nothing," said the doctor.

"You just wait a minute. Two or three nights later he went and called on his friend again and took the dog with him. The dog waited outside a little while and began to howl. Another champagne bottle was thrown at him. He smelt it, winked to himself, and trotted off. He went home, scratched at the door till the servant-girl opened it, attracted my friend's wife's attention, made her follow him to a pile of planks, and whined till they got out a very long and broad one. Then he directed them to where his master was, and, when the door-bell rang and the door opened the revelers found the dog, my friend's wife, the servant, and a stretcher. That dog knew what was needed, you bet."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Father, Mother, and Three Sisters Dead.

Mr. David Claypool, formerly Sergeant-at-Arms of the New Jersey Senate, and now Notary Public at Cedarville, Cumberland Co., N. J., makes the following startling statement: "My father, mother, and three sisters all died with consumption, and my lungs were so weak I raised blood. Nobody thought I could live. My work (ship-smithing) was very straining on me with my weak constitution, and I was rapidly going to the grave. While in this condition I commenced using Mishler's Herb Bitters, and it saved my life. Because it was so difficult to get it in this little place, and I had improved so much, I stopped taking it for a time, and the result is that I have commenced going rapidly down hill again. Somehow, Mishler's Herb Bitters gives appetite and strengthens and builds me up as nothing else does, and I must have a dozen bottles at once. Use this communication as you please, and if any one wants to be convinced of its truth, let them write me and I will make affidavit to it, for I owe my life to Mishler's Herb Bitters."

The secret of the almost invariable relief and cure of consumption, dysentery, diarrhœa, dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver complaints, when Mishler's Herb Bitters is used, is that it contains simple, harmless, and yet powerful ingredients, that act on the blood, kidneys, and liver, and through them strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Purely vegetable in its composition; prepared by a regular physician; a standard medicinal preparation; endorsed by physicians and druggists. These are four strong points in favor of Mishler's Herb Bitters. Mishler's Herb Bitters is sold by all druggists. Price $1.00 per large bottle. 6 bottles for $5.00.

Ask your druggist for MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS. If he does not keep it, do not take anything else, but send a postal card to MISHLER HERB BITTERS CO., 525 Commerce Street, Philadelphia.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

DANIEL M FOX

The United States Mint at Philadelphia is the most important mint in the country, besides being the oldest. There are branches at New Orleans and Carson City, but it is the most important of the mints of Philadelphia. The five from which the coins are struck are made there and then duplicates are sent to the other mints. The position of Superintendent of the mint therefore is one of vast importance and responsibility. Daniel M. Fox, who was appointed on June 8th last by President Cleveland, to the position, is a Philadelphian and was born June 10th. The family comes of revolutionary stock and his maternal ancestor served under Washington at the battle of Yorktown, and assisted the surrender of Cornwallis. After a course of public schools Fox entered the office of Jacob P. Hoskins to study conveyancing and after remaining there two years started in business for himself. He soon became the head of one of the most extensive conveyancing firms in Philadelphia. The firm was one of the finest in the city. Among the best street improvements made by the firm were those on Broad street, which was laid out by the Pennsylvania Railroad. The east side of Broad street was laid out entirely at the expense of the firm, Mr. Fox superintending the work himself. He was also interested in the laying out of Fairmount park. Mr. Fox became Mint Director in 1869, after having been interested in politics for the same office. He was to the last election and had been a member of Select Council. During the term of Mayor Stokley the old Committee of Ten Democrats was formed with a view to be successor by the party machine. The city had grown in the old Committee and the result was the change which led to a contest for the very courage of the mayor present office. In politics Mr. Fox has always been a consistent Democrat.

OBITUARY.

The funeral services of Edward Landon were held at his late residence on Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock, Rev. J. M. Gretchen officiating.

Mr. Landon was born at Old Stockbridge, Mass., Dec. 18th, 1815, and died Saturday night at 11 o'clock, July 4th, 1885, and would have been 70 years of age next December. Was married to Miss Elizabeth Dorman, Oct. 21, 1839. Came to this state in 1855 and lived in this community, Tecumseh, Mich., for 26 years. He has been out of health for a long time, but did not give up working on his farm until some two years ago, and about one year ago became unable to go from the house, and then to help himself but little. In his day was an earnest, active man and engaged in what he had to do with great energy and a whole heart. For several years was a faithful worker and trustee in the Universalist church of this place. Amid his long suffering he never lost sight of the eternal fact of God's fatherhood and constant love and care. He walked down into the valley of the shadow of death, fearing no evil, realizing God was with him, and His rod and staff comforted him. A wife and two daughters mourn his departure. One of the daughters, Mrs. Geo. Stilson of Norwalk, Conn., reached Tecumseh the day before her father's death, the other daughter living at Poultney, Vt., could not be present. They will miss him as a tender, loving and faithful husband, as a kind and solicitous father. Amid their sorrow they mourn not as cast down but as those who feel and trust that "God hath led their dear one on

And he can do no wrong."

The attendance at the funeral was large, for his friendships were deep and warm, and his manly worth in the home, and in neighborhood affairs, in business and devotion to country; in the principles of temperance, rectitude and religion, won for him the esteem of many human hearts. The funeral remarks were based upon the 23d Psalm and were spoken with a deep spirit of sympathy, consolation and prayer. The closing hymn of the choir, entitled "Ever Remembered," was fitly chosen and rendered and no doubt will be to the sorrowing ones and many others present, like an angel's hymn of hope, of the kingdom of Jesus, and of the ever comforting presence and love of God.

The breakfast taken in winter will determine our efficiency for work in the day, and will so influence our whole being for that period of time that no after-meal can correct. The breakfast in winter must contain more nitrogenous food than in summer; it is absolutely needed. You must store heat to furnish material for absorption and for maintaining vitality; add to this nitrogenous food something that will disengage heat from the blood and keep up temperature and you may defy the coldest day. Your face may feel it, your hands may feel it, but your body will be impervious to it and go on disengaging that inward heat which can alone stand against the lowest temperature without. If this first meal has been properly attended to we may presume that vital action can be maintained in full force for five hours at least before it needs replenishing.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

Mr. Eli Westfall of Hillsdale, has been visiting at A. B. VanDeMark's.

Miss Ada Potter of Tecumseh has been a guest of Mrs. L. D. Pomeroy or a few days.

Mrs. D. H. Silvers has been seriously ill for several days. She was taken sick last week Thursday, while in Tecumseh. Dr. Catlin was called and as soon as she was able to ride she was taken home. She is improving at present.

Mrs. J. E. McCollum went to Sand Lake last Tuesday with a party of ten or twelve from Tecumseh.

Miss Maggie Biggins was taken sick last Friday after her brother's funeral and has suffered considerably from heart trouble and nervous prostration.

Mrs. Ed. Rowland and Miss Hessie Cupples drove up from Tecumseh last Monday.

Charles W. Parker of Detroit spent Sunday with Clinton friends.

Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Cook of Tecumseh were in town Sunday.

Charles Parker and Charles Clark took a trip to the lakes last Tuesday. They visited Sand Lake and Devils Lake.

Mr. John Davenport who, for many years owned the hotel at Evans Lake before Henry Lancaster took possession of it, was seen on the streets Monday and Tuesday, shaking hands with many old friends. He met with universal recognition, in spite of the years that have gone by since he lived here.

Mrs. E. W. Freese is visiting her daughter Mrs. W. S. Whittelsey at Ypsilanti.

George Miles, formerly foreman in the printing office of C. W. Clough at this place, has bought C. K. Spafford's printing business.

The "new barber shop" was doomed to a short existence here. The owner "folded his tent like the Arab and silently stole away" last Saturday night.

The woolen mill has need of weavers.

The house formerly occupied by Ed. Semark on Main street is being torn down, to be replaced, it is said, by a brick block.

A street sprinkler would be a very acceptable acquisition to the town. Since so much work has lately been done on the streets, we feel the need of one more than ever before.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Every day interests are largely represented by idleness and all but children look glum. The latter have a mud pie factory two rods south of the bridge and its operatives are not afflicted with strike mania; but lengthen days and work till their faces look like maps of Africa. Men who have waited vainly for employment in hay-fields join lake campers in order to be near their base of supplies, and tramps in all stages of dilapidation hold lawn socials in White's woods. An item is going the rounds of the press, about our four churches and saloons being kept open on Sunday, that seems intended to make us look queer, but what would any such be good for if closed tight as a clam shell on days when people have leisure? If they wish to preserve free agency they must open up against encroachment. A great deal of wool has been marketed here at dissatisfying prices. In fact, prices continually weaken and nothing can be safely depended on but a good appetite.

DEVIL'S LAKE DOINGS.

John Brazee has his new house enclosed and expects to have his opening about the 15th of August.

We had a narrow escape here last Monday. John Horn was capsized in deep water and would probably have drowned had it not been for the timely assistance of Will Reed and Geo. Richardson. Young men should'nt fool with shells.

The following guests from Tecumseh have registered at the Devils Lake House this week: E. W. Cairnes, Chas. King, J. C. Marshall, Fred. Chidester, W. A. Burlingame and wife, J. H. Smith and wife.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Fine hay weather.

Farmers are putting in a fine quality of hay.

Dr. D. W. Loree drew 63 large loads of hay off from 14 acres, on his prairie farm. Who can beat that?

Samuel Fletcher cut his wheat Monday; it is much injured by the Hessian fly.

Oats and corn are doing very nicely at present. Wheat is turning very fast.

New potatoes are very fine and quite plentiful.

Only a few took in the excursion at Devil's Lake Sunday. There will be another next Sunday when all may have an opportunity for a day of recreation.

Mr. and Mrs Israel Schreder visited his sister Mrs. W. H. Arner, Monday.

The school in Dist. No. 5 closed a very successful term of three months on Saturday, taught by Miss Lizzie Beamish, of Tecumseh.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Clark and daughter Hattie, are visiting relatives here at present.

Mr. John Larkin and Mrs. M. A. Barrett went to Hillsdale Friday, to visit friends, returning Tuesday.

W. P. Cadmus while unloading a load of hay one day last week, came very near being choked to death by something flying in his throat from the load.

Mr. Roscoe Conklin and family, of Adrian, spent the Sabbath with his sister, Mrs. Harry Smith, who is quite ill.

Mr. Wilcox, a granite dealer of Ypsilanti, did some work in our cemetery for Mr. Waring last Friday.

Lutie VanZant a former resident of the village called on old friends Friday, and revived their memories of days gone by.

Miss Ella Jackson returned from a visit with friends at Jackson, last Friday.

Weddie Bush and Sammie Arner went to Devil's Lake fishing, last week.

Rev. H. W. Wright, of Dundee, called on friends Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Hamilton and family, of Elkhart, former residents of the place, are visiting relatives and friends in the village and vicinity. Mr. Hamilton is fireing on a passenger train on the L. S. & M. S. R. R.

S. P. Smith was in Adrian on business Monday.

Miss Carrie Shaw, of Adrian, is the guest of Mrs. Samuel Helm.

F. B. Eddy, of Brooklyn, was in the village taking views of some of the residences this week. His work is very fine and gives general satisfaction.

G. W. Jackson went to Hillsdale Wednesday on business.

The singers did a friendly act Sunday evening by furnishing some fine music for the lecture. It is hoped they will continue in the way they have begun.

Mrs. King, daughter of Mr. Myron Sweet, an old acquaintance, gave a lecture on Sunday evening at the church on the "Habits and Customs of the Heathens in India," she being a missionary there. The lecture was very interesting and instructive. Mrs. King will leave in a short time for her field of labor in India.

ADDISON ATOMS.

Homer Turner who died in Ohio last week was buried in the village cemetery Sunday P. M. Mr. T. was one of the oldest and most respected citizens of this vicinity. A number of children survive him.

There is an unusual amount of building in progress here this year, especially in dwelling houses.

The regular annual school meeting of the village occurred on Wednesday evening the 13th inst., at which Messrs. O. B. Bowen and J. C. Morley were elected trustees for the full term. The attendance was much larger than similar meetings for many years, sixty-one votes being cast each ballot. We trust the same interest in the welfare of the school will be evinced during the entire school year as any improvement in this direction can hardly fail to confer a benefit upon all classes and interests of the place.

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

A substantial and beautiful tribute to the late deceased John Henry now stands at the Lake Ridge cemetery. Columbian marble and the heaviest of granite compose its structure. The urn of artificial flowers protected by glass forms a very pleasing feature. The monument was made at Ypsilanti.

Good weather, good hay, and plenty of it.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Phillips, of Ypsilanti, visited their son and friends during the 4th and 5th.

THE MICHIGAN & OHIO

A Tap to an Important Territory.

One of the greatest prides of the Future Great is her railroad system. The iron bands that center in our city are greater in number than any other city of the west containing 80,000 people, and among these there is no road that opens up a more rapidly developing country than the Michigan & Ohio. The road is 156 miles long running from Toledo north and northwest through the counties of Monroe, Lenawee, the corners of Hillsdale and Jackson, through Calhoun, Kalamazoo, and the corner of Barry and into Allegan county to Allegan, about 23 miles from Holland on Lake Michigan.

Going north from Toledo, the first place of importance after leaving Dundee is Tecumseh, an important milling city which is surrounded by a fine milling country. The power for the large mills there is furnished by the River Raisin.

Leaving Tecumseh, the next point of importance is Moscow, on the source of the Kalamazoo river. From here to Allegan, the railroad and river run close together; Marshal, Ceresco and Battle Creek being on both. All of these places are important manufacturing points as the river gives excellent advantages for that sort of enterprises. Marshal is exceedingly circled in its appearance and is a beautiful place.

Battle Creek is one of the most rapidly developing and lively cities in Michigan. It now contains about 15,000 people and its prosperity and growth have gone on unabated during all the dull times. It might very appropriately be styled a manufacturing city, as in it are situated the Union School Furniture Works, two large agricultural works, iron foundries, and other large manufactories.

Battle Creek has also long been famous as a pleasure and health resort. Near by are beautiful lakes with their summer hotels, and the place is noted for its healthfulness. As a summer resort for invalids and others the Sanitarium there is hard to excel.

In selecting a site for the Medical and Surgical Sanitarium, about twenty years ago, its founders gave special attention to the matter of salubrity of location. All points pertaining to the character of the surrounding soil, drainage, water supply, and the nature of the surrounding country in relation to health, were scrutinized with the greatest care. It was only after several months of careful search that the present location was fixed upon, and the experience of nearly twenty years has demonstrated the wisdom of the choice. Michigan enjoys a climate unequaled by that of any of the Middle Western States. It affords a typical "temperate" climate, being situated near the center of the temperate zone, and protected in such a manner as to preserve a more equable temperature than that of any other States adjoining. Its rolling country and immense tracts of timber, protect it to a very great degree, from the parching heat of the prairie States, while its location near the great Lakes, surrounded on all but its southern boundary by broad expanse of water, affords a still greater protection from the severe cold of winter and the intense heat of summer to which her sister States are exposed. No one ever heard of an epidemic of sunstroke or heat stroke in Michigan. When newspapers are rife with reports of scores of deaths daily from sunstroke, in the larger cities and even country districts of adjoining States, such a thing is almost unheard of in Michigan.

This Sanitarium is the largest in the world. Its entire length, including rear extentions, is 475 feet; height, to top of new part, 84 feet; width of main part, 40, 46 and 54 feet; length of promenade in halls and verandas, over one half mile; floor space, more than two acres. The Main building will accommodate nearly 250 persons, and 150 more can be accommodated in the cottages and other buildings of the institution.

There are also other places along the M. & O. that are fast becoming noted as summer resorts. Devil's Lake is one, which is 57 miles from Toledo and situated in the north part of Lenawee county. It was a resort long before the railroad was built but it is now brought much nearer to Toledo—less than two hours ride. The lake is shaped like a letter V. Its length is about four miles, has a maximum width of two miles and it abounds in the choicest varieties of fish.

There has just been opened up at the north end a fine new hotel of stone which is sure of ample patronage. The whole expanse of water is clear as crystal. Its surroundings of forest trees with their rich and varied foliage; the grassy slopes, and the verdant crops together, form a beautiful mirror in its frame, presenting a scene of landscape, and of water, which, like a panoramic vision, delights the eye, pleases the imagination, and excites in the beholder a love for the beautiful in nature. This resort, just such resources of rest and pleasure as are here provided, is what the masses of people require.

Another point is Gull Lake, 26 miles this side of Allegan. This lake is about seven miles long and three wide. Steamers play about and fishing there is excellent.

Besides being a road that leads to many points for pleasure the M. & O. opens up one of the finest wheat countries in the world, and in this respect is of great importance to Toledo.

The line is supplied with twelve new elevators—at Addison, Onsted, Moscow, Hanover, Homer, Eckford, Ceresco, Augusta, Richland and Allegan. The road is also building up a reputation as a coal supplying road, on account of the direct line from Toledo, where they connect with several Ohio coal roads. At Allegan they strike the Chicago & West Michigan, which leads to the great lumber regions of Western Michigan, and to Muskegon, the largest lumber producing city in the world.

Their live stock shipments in season are large and just now the road is shipping large quantities of wool from all points to New England.

The train service of the road is good and the officials obliging, competent and wide-awake to the interests of their patrons.—Toledo Post.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine

For August is a bright and sparkling Summer number. The leading article is "American Missionaries in Mexico," anent whom some hard things are put down. If the writer Emily Pierce, is sure of her facts, it is not a creditable record. Another of the sesies of Christ's Parables, and two more of the Sacred Musicians, appear in this number. "The First Missions in California," with its illustrations, is a very intereresting article; and "From Canterbury to Dover," by G. A. Davis, a delightful bit of description. Dr. Talmage's sermon is on "Left-handed Men." There are three pages of music devoted to a setting of the Te Deum, by D. E. Hervey. A readable article on Lowell is accompanied with his portrait and copious extracts from his poems. There is also an article on John Ruskin, with a portrait. The "Glances at Bible History" is devoted to King Solomon, and brings the subject to the end of his reign. The eccentric Georgia evangelist, the Rev. Sam. Jones, is given a portrait and biographical sketch; and there are also portraits of Dean Smith, of Canterbury, and Bishop Ellicott both of the Bible Revision Companies. The two serial stories—"Love's Harvest," by B. L. Farjeon, and "What She Made of Her Life," by Lydia Hoyt Farmer—are continued, and the shorter articles are abundant and attractive. Published by Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York City, at 25 cents a number, or $2.50 a year.

A Brooklyn clergyman, Rev. Dr. Ludlow, who had been traveling in the Holy Land, had the bravery to venture a visit to the curious colony of Druses—the Mohammedan sect inhabiting the side of Mount Hermon, which a few years ago was guilty of the frightful massacre of the Christains thereabouts. He found them a strange people, blood-thirsty for backsheesh, however, rather than for gore, and turning their hatred for the time being against Turks instead of Christians. The curiosity of the Druses extended to the interior of their visitors' pockets, and they even made off with the latters' boots, which they had politely taken off in calling upon the chief of the village. Dr. Ludlow will give an account of his amusing experiences in the August Harper's.

Demorest's Illustrated Monthly Magazine for August cannot fail to give pleasure to its numerous readers. It opens with an excellent story by Eleanor Kirk, and, in addition, there are other admirable stories. The article on Heraldry, which is profusely illustrated, is both instructive and entertaining, and among other good articles are "Memories of Napoleon" and "The Grave of Rob Roy." The valuable papers, "From Pencil to Brush," are continued, and "Woman's Indebtedness to the Animal Creation" will be read with interest. The various departments are, as usual, well filled, and the oil picture, "Music," by Leloir, is a charming production.

My Little Mistakes.

BY J. S. FRIEDMANN.

then and saw a cheerful look on his round pleasant face, as if something had occurred that made him very happy. Presently I said musingly, "It is one of Mrs. MacFlum's tales that makes it so [illegible] of men, dear old Wilkie!" I looked at my companion, I thought, and a merry expression in her eyes, that seemed to spring from a look she gave Tom, with [illegible]

[illegible]

"Probably you do—some one in London.

"No, some one in Ireland, some one who is standing here to me now."

There was a pause in the garden after I had spoken. She did not reply, or laugh, but raised her eyes and looked at me once. Then I saw the color come into her cheeks.

"I think I must go in now," she said presently, "or they will miss me, if they want me to sing."

"Give me a flower before you go?" I pleaded, not daring to say more.

She stooped down, plucked a red rose, just touched her lips with it, and handed it to me. When I looked at her there was the merry light in her eyes I had seen in it when she first spoke to me that evening. In another second she turned and ran toward the house.

I followed slowly. Just as I arrived at the glass doors of the dining-room that communicated with the garden, I came suddenly face to face with Tom Phelan.

"Well, Fitz, what are you doing out here?" he said, with a smile that I was ill-natured enough to set down in my mind as a grin. He spoke as if he intended to express surprise, but failed.

"Doing? Looking at the moon," I replied, staring up as I spoke, into the Summer sky.

"Don't you think a pair of gray eyes better worth looking at?" he asked, with a merry twinkle in his own.

"Perhaps," I answered calmly.

"I say, old man, you have behaved capitally—better than I expected."

There was a sudden change in his voice that struck me.

"How?"

"You have fallen in love—don't deny it—with the girl who will make you a happy man. You have done just as I wished, old fellow."

He placed his arm around my shoulders, as he had often done when we were boys at school.

"You make a mistake there, Tom; I have no desire to sell myself for a thousand a year."

"What do you mean?" he asked, with surprise shining in his good-natured face.

"I have no desire to marry the woman you were good enough to select for me—Miss Fay."

Tom burst out laughing, this time holding his fat sides as if he feared he should explode.

"What is the matter?" I asked, when he had almost done.

"You will be the death of me, Fitz, if you go on making these little mistakes."

"I don't understand you," I said.

"You cunning dog! I saw you both out here two minutes ago, and you have fallen in love with her, like a sensible man, just as I wanted you to do."

"My dear fellow, you said it was the boy's godmother you had selected for me, and that is Miss Fay."

"Miss Fay is one of them. Kitty Berfort is the other," and to emphasize his words, Tom Phelan struck me on the shoulder with a blow that made me stagger.

"You are a brick," I said to him, seizing his hand with enthusiasm.

"Poor good-natured Tom Phelan!" His eyes grew dim just for a second, as he returned my friendly grasp.

"Tom," I said, "God bless your boy!"

I spoke in such a grave, impressive voice that the happy father burst out laughing in my face. This time I joined him heartily.

Before I left the Green Isle, Kitty Berfort and I became engaged. When her father came back from India, we were married, and at our wedding-breakfast Tom Phelan—who, by the way, had that week been presented with remarkably fine twins—told the story of my little mistakes.

Cleanliness.

The surface of the human body, and even the delicate membrane covering the eye, as well as the mucous lining of the internal passages of the animal body may and often do become diseased in such a manner, by neglect of purity and careful cleanliness, that they will give off contagious matter. The contagious disorders of the skin, the eyes and the mouth are results of neglect of cleanliness, and are justly esteemed very disgusting. Decaying matters, whether vegetable or animal, and not unfrequently the still living but unhealthy and unclean surfaces and tissues of both animal and vegetable bodies, are apt to become infected with parasites which prey upon and injure or destroy the tissues. Even the tenderest parts and juices of vegetable substances and the skin, the muscles and blood of the animal, may be harmed in this way. It was a little invisible parasite which destroyed the potatoes at harvest time throughout the country many years ago, and there are some foul waters and infected kinds of meat which will breed disease in persons who partake of them. Therefore, it is a duty to be cleanly in food and drink, as well as in our breathing and personal habits. It is doubtful if persons who become filthy in their habits and neglect to provide for the purification of their bodies, clothing and premises, will ever be found pure and sweet in their thoughts, language and influence.

The story is told of an old hunter in Michigan who lost his way in the woods a number of times while the country was new. At length he secured a pocket compass and its use was explained to him by a friend. But shortly afterward he lost his way again and lay out as usual. When found he was asked why he did not travel by the compass. He did not dare, he said. He wanted to go north, and he "tried to make the thing point north, but it wasn't no use, 'twould shake, shake, shake round and point southeast every time."

The outlet of the Great Salt Lake of Utah is reported to have been discovered.

A PENNSYLVANIA ROMANCE.

How Mr. Lincoln Relieved the Distresses of a Newly-Married Couple.

In the spring of 1863, a very handsome and attractive young lady from Philadelphia came to my office with a note from a friend asking me to assist her in obtaining an interview with the President. Some time ago she had been married to a young man who was a lieutenant in a Pennsylvania regiment. He had been compelled to leave her the day after the wedding to rejoin his command in the army of the Potomac. After some time he obtained leave of absence, returned to Philadelphia, and started on a brief honeymoon journey with his bride. A movement of the army being imminent the War Department issued a peremptory order requiring all absent officers to rejoin their regiments on a certain day, on penalty of dismissal in case of disobedience. The bride and groom, away on their hurried wedding tour, failed to see the order, and on his return he was met by a notice of his dismissal from the service. The young fellow was completely prostrated by the disgrace, and his wife hurried to Washington to get him restored. I obtained for her an interview with the President. She told her story with simple and pathetic eloquence, and wound up by saying: "Mr. Lincoln, won't you help us? I promise you, if you will restore him, he will be faithful to his duty." The President had listened to her with evident sympathy and a half amused smile at her earnestness, and as she closed her appeal he said, with paternal kindness: "And you say, my child, that Fred was compelled to leave you the day after the wedding? Poor fellow, I don't wonder at his anxiety to get back, and if he stayed a little longer than he ought to have done we'll have to overlook his fault this time. Take this card to the Secretary of War and he will restore your husband." She went to the War Department, saw the Secretary, who rebuked her for troubling the President and dismissed her somewhat curtly. As it happened, on her way down the War Department stairs, her hopes chilled by the Secretary's abrupt manner, she met the President ascending. He recognized her, and with a pleasant smile said: "Well, my dear, have you seen the Secretary?" "Yes, Mr. Lincoln," she replied, "and he seemed very angry with me for going to you. Won't you speak to him for me?" "Give yourself no trouble," said he. "I will see that the order is issued." And in a few days her husband was remanded to his regiment.

I am sorry to add that not long after he was killed at the battle of Gettysburg, thus sealing with his blood her pledge that he should be faithful to his duty.—Ex-Assistant Attorney-General Coffey, in Philadelphia Press.

BOSTON VISITORS.

Peanuts and Pink Lemonade at the Hub—Rural Sight-Seers.

An influx of country visitors to Boston is invariably signalized by the profusion of paper bags, business circulars and peanut shells that litter the common, the public garden, and the sidewalks generally. The rural sight-seer has a pronounced partiality for peanuts. Whenever he may be expected to flock thither the supply of peanuts on hand to meet all possible demands is made startlingly manifest. Carts with heaped-up masses of the edible appear in all directions. What becomes of them at other times is a mystery to the uninitiated. Whence their venders spring is also another secret that no one has attempted to solve. They are always sunburned men of bucolic aspect and spectacled raucous voices and somnolent bearing. Another feature of the rush of rural visitors hitherward is the simultaneous appearance of pink lemonade. Why pink has never been explained; nor has any one curious in such matters taken the trouble to discover the curious connection between this lemonade and the frowsy young men without shirt-collars or neckties, and having an abnormal development of the Adam's apple in their throat, who supply the blushing beverage to the thirsty strangers in our midst. The city was prolific last week in these articles and their purveyors. With the departure of the circus both disappeared. It might be reasonably argued that they follow in the train of the circus were it not that they come to the surface again on every public holiday. It is not in this locality alone that peanuts and pink lemonade prevail on these occasions. The custom extends from one end of the country to the other, proving that there must be some subtle and as yet unsolved sympathy between country people bent upon enjoyment and the festal peanut and tinted lemonade.—Boston Gazette.

What He Found Out.

"I say, Jones," called the city editor to a reporter in the next rooms "I wish you'd go down to Captain Davis' and find out something about the death of his brother."

"All right, sir," replied the obedient Jones, and started off. In about an hour he returned.

"Well," inquired the c. e., "when did he die?"

"Didn't find out," said Jones.

"What was the matter?"

"Didn't find out," repeated the reporter.

"When are they going to bury him?"

"Didn't find out," he said again.

"Didn't find out? Thunderation, man, didn't you find anything out?" exclaimed the agitated city editor.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, well, what was it?"

"Captain Davis," said the reporter, with a sad, sweet smile, and the c. e. rose up and bumped his head against the wall.—Merchant Traveler.

—We have heard of a man being assaulted with almost every conceivable weapon, from a lighted lamp to a brickbat, and we even recall an old song in which the singer was wont to threaten to strike his audience with a feather or to stab them with a rose; but it remained for a Cambridge young man to be fined for assaulting a lady with a sunbeam reflected from a mirror held in his hands.—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

CONSTIPATION!

There is no medium through which disease so often attacks the system than by Constipation, and there is no other malady to which flesh is heir to more apt to be neglected, from the fact that its inconvenience may not be immediately felt from irregular action of the bowels. When there is not regular action, the retention of decayed and effete matter, with its poisonous gases, soon poisons the whole system by being absorbed into it, causing piles, fistula, headache, impure blood and many other serious affections. BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS will immediately relieve, and one bottle positively cure or relieve any case of Constipation.

"Was troubled for a year with torpid liver and indigestion, and after trying everything imaginable used BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS. The first bottle revived me and the second cured me entirely."—J. S. Williamson, Rochester, N. Y.

KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this is neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies, are produced by it.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alterative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs and rejuvenating the entire system. This great is becoming universal as to how such an immense sale could be created in Lowell for HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. But, my friend, if you could stand behind our counter a week and hear what those say who are using it, the reason would appear as clear as the noon-day sun. The real curative power of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA demonstrates itself in every case where our directions are faithfully regarded. We would that we might get before the people a fractional part of the confidence that is expressed to us every day in this medicine by those who have carefully noted (without prejudice) its effects upon the blood and through that upon the whole system, stimulating all the functions of the body to perform the duties nature requires at their hand. Cold Hands and Feet.

THE WONDER

LOWELL, Feb. 3, 1879.

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—About one year ago my daughter commenced taking your Sarsaparilla. At that time she had very little appetite; could take no long walks, and her face was badly broken out with a humor. She was low-spirited, troubled with cold hands and feet; her blood seemed to be poor, and she was in a condition which caused us great anxiety. After taking one bottle of your Sarsaparilla she began to improve; and she now has a good appetite and can take much longer walks. Her humor is nothing compared with what it was one year ago. She is in better spirits, is not troubled with cold hands and feet as previously. And I attribute this improvement in her condition largely to your Sarsaparilla. She has taken six bottles, and intends to continue its use. I was inclined to oppose the trial of it at first. I now have great faith in it as a blood purifier. Very truly yours,

"Yes, I expect it is," she answered coyly: "and it must be much pleasanter to write them than to read them." And then he looked up at the shrubs that grew around them and said nothing, while she continued to toy with the chilly orange-flavored ice.—Boston Post.

REINDEER HUNTING.

How the Esquimaux Hunt the Reindeer—Aided By Boys and Dogs.

Esquimaux dogs are used in various ways in hunting. When the weather is so foggy that a hunter can not see very far, and there is consequently but little prospect of his killing anything unless he almost stumbles upon it, one of them will take his bow and arrows, or his gun, if he be fortunate enough to own one, and giving the best-trained hunting-dog in charge of one of his sons, they start out reindeer-hunting. The boy puts a harness on the dog, ties the trace around his own waist, or holds it in his hands and follows his father out into the fog.

Of course, the older Esquimaux has some idea where the reindeer will be grazing or resting and he soon finds out which way the wind is blowing over the place where he suspects the reindeer to be. Then, with his boy and the dog, he goes around in such a way that the game will not be disturbed, to some place where the wind blowing over the reindeer will come toward the hunters. As soon as the place is reached, the dog smells the reindeer, and commences sniffing the air as if anxious to go toward them. The boy allows the dog to advance slowly, still holding on to the harness so that it shall not run away. As soon as the dog scents the deer, it goes directly toward them, and when it is quite near, it grows excited, and commences to jump and to jerk the harness trace by which the boy is holding it, being a well-trained hunting dog, however, it never barks so as to frighten the deer by the sound.

The hunter now knows from these excited actions of the dog that the reindeer must be close at hand, although he can not see them for the fog. So he tells his son to hold the dog and remain in that spot while he takes his bow or gun and crawls cautiously forward in the proper direction. Before he has gone far, probably not more than twenty or twenty-five yards away, the huge forms of two or three reindeer loom up through the fog. If he is a good hunter he will at least bring one down, and perhaps two or three of them, and so have something for supper. When there is snow on the ground, the boy will generally take two or three dogs along, and after a reindeer is killed, will use them to drag it into the snow house. As the little Esquimaux loves excitement, this is good sport, and in this way he soon learns to hunt quite well.—Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, in St. Nicholas.

A young Englishman has had his legs specially exempted from the insurance granted him by several companies, whose losses through the sudden weakness of that limb had led them to be wary in the matter. Hence clauses in his policy provide that he can not recover unless proof is made that his injuries shall not have been caused by the faulty member.

—The Lancet says that appetite is a most misleading sensation, only remotely related to the actual demands of the organism. If we only ate more deliberately we should find half our accustomed quantity of food sufficient to satisfy the most eager cravings of hunger, and hence save ourselves from the evils of dyspepsia, or, on the other hand, a tendency to over increase in weight.

—Timber rafts on the Rhine are a noticeable characteristic of that historic river. A single raft has often eight or ten small houses on it, and from 400 to 500 workmen, rowers and pilots. —The increase of the criminal class in England has by no means kept pace with that of the general population. In the fifteen years from 1869 to 1874 the population of England and Wales is augmented by nearly 5,000,000 souls, but the prison population had actually fallen by more than 1,500. If England had gone on producing criminals at the rate at which she was turning them out in 1869, she would have had a prison population in 1884 of something like 14,000, instead of one below 10,000.

—The public baths of Vienna are said to be the finest in the world. The building itself, says the English Mechanic, is situated in the heart of the city, and incloses a basin 156 feet in width by 578 feet in length, and varying in depth to twelve feet. The enormous quantity of water contained in this basin is renewed three times a day. The whole establishment has accommodation for 1,500 persons, and is open from May 1st to October 31st, and from five in the morning until dusk. There is also a bath, restricted to ladies, open from nine in the morning until one, and the Vienna ladies are especially good swimmers.

THERMAL LEVELS.

How Discrepancies in Thermometer Marks May Be Explained.

The general fact that the temperature of the air varies with different levels above the earth's surface has long been recognized. Meteorologists tell us that there is usually a fall of one degree Fahr. for every 300 feet of ascent above the sea level, with certain variations for local causes. We may call this a meteorological thermal fluctuation, and it is always marked by a fall of temperature with increased elevation. But there is an equally important change of temperature in the opposite direction, of great importance to the farmer and fruit-grower, namely, a loss of temperature as we descend into valleys. In early years I was a country doctor, and had to take many a long ride in the night. The road passed from a high bluff into a deep valley, with another bluff on the opposite side. When the air was still I could detect by the change of temperature the transition from the warm air of the bluffs to the chilly air of the valley. It was like passing into a cold stream of water, and the change was equally abrupt on passing into the warm air of the opposite bluff.

I appreciate the fact that one's feelings can hardly be accepted as a reliable test of temperature, and that a thermometer is better than a sensation to furnish reliable physical data. "The temperature of the open air" for any given locality, and for the same time, is supposed by most persons to be a definite and uniform quantity. If two persons in the same neighborhood report different temperatures for the same hour, it is supposed that such difference must arise from a difference in the correctness of the thermometers, or some accidental variation of exposure, it being assumed that the "temperature of the open air" for a given locality and identical time would be the same. Many persons suppose it is a very simple thing to determine the temperature of the open air; it is only necessary to hang the thermometer outdoors till it has reached a point of no fluctuation and then read off the temperature by the thermometer scale. But when trial is made even with thermometers that compare favorably with each other under identical conditions, a marked discrepancy is often observed in places of near neighborhood.

Feathered Slaves.

No people are more ingenious than the Chinese in the minor arts of life. That they have succeeded in training birds to fish is a striking example of their ingenuity and patience. Instead of carrying nets, the fishermen provide themselves with a large number of cormorants which perch on the edge of the boats. It is a curious spectacle to see these creatures engaged in fishing, diving into the water and always coming up with a fish in their beaks. As the Chinese fear the vigorous appetites of their feathered servants, they fasten around their necks an iron ring, large enough to allow their breathing but too small to admit of the entrance of the fish they seize; to prevent their straying about in the water and wasting the time desired for their work, a cord is attached to the ring and to one claw of the cormorant by which he is pulled up when inclined to stay too long under water. When tired he is permitted to rest for a while; but if he abuse the indulgence and waste his time, a few strokes of the bamboo recalls him to duty, and the poor diver resumes his laborious occupation. In passing from one fishing ground to another, the cormorants perch side by side, so as not to disturb the equilibrium of the frail vessel.

More Than a Million.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—A reporter of the Times-Democrat, who recently completed a tour of this and neighboring States, visiting every city, town and hamlet, states that he interviewed all wholesale and retail druggists and storekeepers, as well as transportation companies, with a view of learning the volume of trade in certain articles. The statistics thus gathered show that during the past two years over one million two hundred thousand bottles of St. Jacobs oil were sold in this section alone, and that this quantity largely exceeds the total combined sales of all other similar remedies during that period. He adds that dealers, as well as the public, continue unanimous in their praise of the wonderful pain-curing powers of this unappraoched remedial agent.

The breakfast taken in winter will determine our efficiency for work in the day, and will so influence our whole being for that period of time that no after-meal can correct. The breakfast in winter must contain more nitrogenous food than in summer; it is absolutely needed. You must store heat to furnish material for absorption and for maintaining vitality; add to this nitrogenous food something that will disengage heat from the blood and keep up temperature and you may defy the coldest day. Your face may feel it; your hands may feel it; but your body will be impervious to it and go on disengaging that inward heat which can alone stand against the lowest temperature without. If this first meal has been properly attended to we may presume that vital action can be maintained in full force for five hours at least before it needs replenishing.

The Secret of Wealth.

Broken down invalids do you wish to gain flesh, to acquire an appetite, to enjoy a regular habit of body, to obtain refreshing sleep, to feel and know that every fiber and tissue of your system is being braced up and renovated. If so commence at once a course of Golden Seal Bitters. In one week you will be convalescent. In a month you will be well. Don't despair because you have a weak constitution. Fortify the body against disease by purifying all the fluids with Golden Seal Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, are rendered disease proof by this great invigorant. Ruinous bills for medical attendance may be avoided by counteracting the first symptoms of sickness with these Bitters. They are recommended from friend to friend, and the sale increases daily. We warrant a cure. They are a positive cure also for all female complaints. In these diseases they have no equal. Take no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

A Bird that Turns Somersaults.

There's a pretty little bird that lives in China, and is called the Fork-Tailed Parus. He is about as big as a robin, and has a red beak, yellow legs, black tail, and red-and-yellow wings. Nearly all the colors are in his dress, you see, and he is a gay fellow. This bird has a trick known by no other birds that ever I heard of. He turns somersaults! Not only does he do this in free life on the trees, but also after he is caught and put into a cage. He throws his head far back, and over he goes, touching the bars of his cage, and alighting upon his feet on the floor or on a perch. He will do it over and over a number of times without stopping, as though he thought it great fun. All his family have the same trick, and they are called Tumblers. The people of China are fond of keeping them in cages and seeing them tumble.

THE EDITORS VACATION

NOTES ON THE PRINTERS PILGRIMAGE TO THE SUMMER RESORTS OF NORTHERN MICHIGAN

They Visit the Traverse Country with the Exception of Petoskey—Delightful Weather and Hospitality of Harbor Springs.

[illegible] week and no place [illegible] we concluded to accept the invitation of a free ride over the railroads and attend the meeting of the Michigan Press Association which was held last week at Traverse City. Accordingly we [illegible] borrowed an umbrella and taking sister Leana along to hold the umbrella over our hats we took the overland route to Britton, [illegible] Saturday evening, July 5th. After partaking of John Exelby's hospitality for an hour or so, we boarded the Sunday evening train on the Wabash and went to Romulus. After a half an hour we took the night train on the F. & P. M. road and arrived in East Saginaw at six o'clock A. M. The forenoon was spent with brother George and in strolling about the city. As George could not leave home we prevailed upon his wife to accompany us and she made one of our party from Saginaw. At noon the special editorial train came along from Merrill with about one hundred editors on it already on board. Len Lewis' county was well represented. Among those whom we found at Saginaw and who came on subsequent trains were T. S. Applegate and wife, of the Adrian Times, E. J. Smith & daughter of the Adrian Record, F. W. Salmon and wife, of the Blissfield Advance, Will Schermerhorn, of the Hudson Gazette, and C. F. Field, of the Tecumseh News. Mat D. Blosser and wife of the Manchester Enterprise were also in attendance, and M. D. Hamilton and wife, of the Monroe Commercial.

Soon after our arrival at Reed City a heavy special train came along from Grand Rapids over the G. R. & I., and from that point the excursionists took one train into Traverse City. At Cadillac C. T. Chapin, wife and daughter came on board. Five miles north of Cadillac we reach the highest elevation on the road, 800 feet above the level of Lake Michigan. At Walton we branch off for Traverse City, and here the party is greeted by Editor Bates of the Traverse Herald, and Editor Sprague, of the Eagle, who came down to escort the visitors into the city. Although they had their hands full the duty was gallantly performed.

Our train arrived at Traverse City about sundown with three hundred on board. A brass band and nearly the entire population of the city welcomed the party and escorted us to the Park Place Hotel. Several had arrived before the special train, during the day, and a large number came in on Monday night and Tuesday morning. During the day Tuesday, there were nearly 400 visitors to be provided for, and they were all handsomely entertained. The jam at Park Place on Monday evening reminded us of a crowd at Barnum's show. It was ten o'clock before all were provided with supper, and nearly midnight before all had been domiciled for the night. The ladies were accommodated at the Park Place, but many gentlemen were compelled to find berths in the steamer "City of Traverse," and at the Occidental and Locust Grove hotels.

Tuesday was a beautiful day and was well spent. A session of the Western Press Association was held Tuesday forenoon in Library Hall. Ed. E. Smith, of the Howard City Record, read a breezy paper entitled "C. O. D." Geo. W. Buckley, of Battle Creek, read a very able paper entitled, "The Duty of an Editor." Major Long, of the Mt. Pleasant Times, read a practical paper on the "Rules for Display." The unique Hiram Potts of the Grand Haven Courier Journal, gave one of his witty and characteristic talks upon "Pen, Ink and Paste Pot." Farmer Reynolds, of the defunct Grand Rapids Cyclone, gave a poem on "The Knights of the Quill."

Tuesday afternoon the Michigan State Press was in session. "Random Thoughts upon the Newspaper Business" was read by Tom S. Applegate, of the Adrian Times. "The Press as an Educator," by Wm. Van Buren, of the Lansing Republican, was read in his absence by S. P. Cook. "The Mission of a Country Newspaper," by C. B. Angell, of the Charlotte Republican, was read by his partner, C. F. Bevier. "Hints on the Preservation of Papers," by Geo. of Chicago. Ren Wheeler of the Reed City Clarion gave his annual song solo, which brought down the house. The Press Song, written by Major Long, was sung to the press, about and last with a hearty chorus.

Traverse City is a beautiful town of [illegible] people, situated at the head of the west arm of Grand Traverse Bay. It has two excellent papers, the Herald and Eagle, both of which, as a splendid advertising medium, are prospering finely. [illegible] an enterprising town and is the leading business town in Northwestern Michigan.

The Boardman river furnishes about 1,000 water power. The city has a large flouring mill, two immense saw mills, an extensive brick yard and numerous smaller establishments. The brick for the new asylum were manufactured here. The heavy firm of Hannah, Lay & Co. have done much to build up the city. This firm own the elegant steamer City of Traverse which plies between that city and Chicago, also the T. S. Faxton and City of Grand Rapids which furnish a daily line between the different towns on the Northwestern shore. They own a four story brick block of seven stores and also the Park Place Hotel which will accommodate two hundred and fifty guests. Col. J. D. Billings is the present manager. It is finely furnished and admirably conducted in every respect. There was a big Fourth of July celebration here on the Saturday previous and the city was decked out in evergreens, bunting and national flags. The citizens had on their holiday attire and dispensed their hospitality with a lavish hand. They entertained the entire party—nearly four hundred in numbers—for one day and two nights, free of all expense. Besides this, every carriage in the city was at the disposal of the visitors during Tuesday, any one who desired could partake of a free ride. Drives were taken down the coast of the bay, to the water works, to Judge Ramsdell's famous fruit farm and to the new insane asylum. The asylum is nearing completion and will be in readiness to receive patients within a month. It is a magnificent building constructed of cream brick, located about a mile south west of the city and overlooking the bay. After traveling through the corridors of one story for twenty minutes we concluded to postpone the inspection of the entire building until some future time.

Tuesday evening a reception was given at the Park Place in which both citizens and excursionists participated.

The Boys Cornet Band gave a fine concert in front of the Hotel and within the parlors the company was entertained with recitations and singing by different persons. Before dispersing, the excursionists gave three hearty cheers for the citizens of Traverse and the band and President Hampton in their behalf returned thanks to the citizens for their unbounded hospitality. Too much cannot be said in praise of the manner in which we were received at Traverse City. Our reception there, from first to last, was literally a "free show." The citizens of the beautiful city eclipsed themselves, and established it as the banner town of Northern Michigan. It is growing in reputation every year as a fine summer resort. For boat riding, for fishing, for beautiful drives in the forest, it takes the lead among all the towns on the Northern shore.

Wednesday morning at 8 o'clock the entire party—numbering at least 400, left for Charlevoix on board the three steamers City of Traverse, Faxton and City of Grand Rapids. The boats were literally covered with evergreen, flags and bunting and presented a most beautiful sight as they steamed out into the bay abreast of each other. The City of Traverse took the place of flagship with the Faxton and Grand Rapids on either side. It was a halcyon morning, the surface of the bay was smooth as a mirror and as the boats swung from the docks amidst the inspiring strains of music from two bands, the party bid a reluctant farewell to Traverse City, and braced themselves up for more festivities to come. Eighteen miles north we pass Old Mission and Northport, and the Faxton halts at Norwood as usual. At 2 P. M. Charlevoix is reached. As the City of Traverse drew too much water to enter the channel, she hove too outside and transferred her cargo to the Faxton, and returned to Traverse City. During the remainder of the trip the party was conveyed on the Faxton and Grand Rapids.

At Charlevoix we were met by a committee of citizens and a fine band of music and escorted to the Opera House, where an address of welcome was delivered by A. D. Cruikshank and a response by President Hampton. The hungry crowd were then escorted to the Fountain City House and the Chicago Club House where a sumptuous complimentary dinner was served by the generous people of Charlevoix. The town is located on the banks of a sheet of water called Round lake which is connected with the big lake by an artificial channel. Just beyond Round lake and connected with it by another shade channel is Pine Lake. Near the junction of these two lakes are located the Baptist resort and the Chicago Club house and resort. The high bluffs shut out the village from view from Lake Michigan, but a fine view can be obtained from Pine Lake. Charlevoix has improved wonderfully during the past two years and is becoming one of the most noted resorts in the north of Section. The climate is said to be unsurpassed for hay fever sufferers. At 4 o'clock P. M. the Faxton and Grand Rapids again received their load. As we steamed through the draw bridge and into the channel, the party gave three hearty cheers for Charlevoix and her hospitable people and we proceeded down the lake to Little Traverse bay and Petoskey. Here Emeray Hine and his wife, of the Lowell Journal, got left. Whether it was his own or his wife's fault is a disputed question which we leave them to settle. The captain of the Faxton kindly slackened speed, swung the steamer up to the jetty and the deserted editor and his better half were hauled on board. Hine claimed that there was a conspiracy to leave him. One editorial brother had borrowed some money of him at Charlevoix and another a shirt at Traverse, and they were anxious to get rid of him.

Petoskey was reached at seven P. M. where we were received by a band of music and escorted to the hotels. Petoskey is built on a series of bluffs and nestles on the hillside like an amphitheatre. It presents a beautiful panoramic view as approached from the bay. The party was amply provided for at the Arlington, Cushman, Occidental and Clifton Houses. It was our good fortune to find excellent rooms at the Arlington. This hotel is built on the bluff north of town and commands a magnificent view of the bay. It is admirably kept and furnishes first-class accommodations in every respect. We had an elegant supper served at the Arlington that evening, the enjoyment of which was heightened by a pleasing episode. A party of eight—seven besides ourself—were seated at a table near the west window of the dining hall, from which we could look out upon the bay. The waiter had taken our orders and we were leisurely chatting to while the time away, when some one exclaimed "Look at that sunset." The western sky was covered with fleecy clouds except at the horizon where a streak of clear blue kissed the water's edge. As Old Sol sank below the clouds and his disk touched the water of the bay, suddenly the clouds above, the placid surface of Little Traverse, and the foliage on the bluffs were all bathed in a flood of golden light. Flashes of crimson streaked up to the zenith like a display of aurora borealis. Gradually the sun sank beneath the waves, the light gold and crimson colors faded into a sombre hue and the tired of Light had dropped into his western couch. To the eye of our imagination it was a living picture of what Paradise might be.

After supper, business meetings of both associations were held in the reception hall of the Arlington. At the State Press meeting the following officers were chosen. A. J. Aldrich, of Coldwater Republican, president; Franklin Moore, St. Clair Republican, Jesse Minchem, Evart Review, and O. W. Rowland, of the Paw Paw Northerner, vice presidents; J. W. Fitzgerald, of the Ovid Union, treasurer, and Robert Smith, of the Ithaca Journal, secretary. Coldwater was appointed the next place of meeting. Dewey's paper on the "Relation of the Press to Railroads," was ordered printed in the proceedings. Thanks were returned to Sellers and Hampton, and A. McMillen offered a sentiment to the ladies. The committee on resolutions offered the usual compliments. T. S. Applegate, R. S. Warren and A. McMillen were appointed a committee to meet with a like committee from the West Michigan Press, to buy a gold medal for Perry Hannah and testimonials to the general ticket and passenger agents of the G. R. & I. and the F. & P. M.

The Western press then met and completed their business as follows: The following officers were elected: L. M. Sellers, Cedar Springs Clipper, President; J. W. Long, Mt. Pleasant Times, vice president; Chas. S. Hampton, Harbor Springs Independent, secretary; William P. Nisbet, Big Rapids Herald, treasurer; J. W. Long, Mt. Pleasant Times and L. J. Merchant, St. Joseph Republican, executive committee. J. W. Hine, Robert Smith and J. W. Fitzgerald were appointed a committee on badge for Perry Hannah. For this purpose $70 was raised by both associations.

At ten o clock that evening the citizens of Petoskey tendered to the excursionists a grand complimentary ball at the Arlington. Music was furnished by the Arlington band, and the large reception hall of the hotel was a bevy of beauty. A sumptuous collation was served during the evening and the festivities were prolonged until the wee sma hours.

Thursday forenoon what there was left of it after breakfast was employed in strolling about town, visiting the beach to gather pebbles, visiting the water works, etc.

At two o'clock P. M. a special train was in waiting to convey the crowd to Harbor Springs. We passed Bay View and Wequetonsing, but only a halt was made at either place. Both these resorts are now rapidly filling up.

Upon arriving at Harbor Springs, carriages were in waiting to convey the ladies to the bluffs, north of the village. As these were soon filled the remainder of the company were invited to stow themselves into two large sail boats and take a sail. We chanced to be drafted into the sail boat division. The half hour's sail out into the bay was delightful, as we were sailing with the wind, but the return trip was quite the reverse. A sudden gale of wind and a smart shower arose and as we had to tack about forty times, more or less, to get back to the dock, the storm overtook us opposite Harbor Point light house. A few of the party had shawls and umbrellas, but more didn't, so we wrapped ourselves in a cloak of resignation and let it rain. We were obliged to put in at the Harbor Point dock where the little steamer Gracie Barker came to our rescue, and as soon as we were nicely housed, the shower—was over.

The excursionists were then conveyed to the Lansing resort hotel on Harbor Point where an elegant supper was served, and an hour was very pleasantly enjoyed sauntering about among the cottages. The special train returned to Petoskey about sundown. Thursday evening we spent an hour very pleasantly at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Totten. They had lots of questions to ask about their old Tecumseh acquaintances and sent back their best respects to all enquiring friends.

Many left on the evening trains for home, and the party formally broke up on Friday morning. A few went North to spend a day at Mackinac, but nearly all took the morning trains South on the G. R. & I. We left Petoskey at 9.20 A. M. Arrived at Cadillac at 1:30 P. M. and stopped off there one train while the balance of our private party went on to Saginaw and stopped there until Saturday noon.

At Cadillac we found our old friend S. H. Merritt, with whom we stopped. He fills the position of head bookkeeper for the lumber firm of Cobb & Mitchell. We visited some of the big saw-mills and saw a band saw rip up a log four feet in diameter. Made C. T. Chapin a call, and also J. B. McAdam, formally of Clinton, who now runs a dry goods store there. Called at the newspaper offices and found the open sesame to their new Odd Fellows hall which is a magnificent room. Found Bro. Field of the News, and Mat Blosser of the Enterprise doing Cadillac the same afternoon.

We left Cadillac on Saturday morning at 6:20. At Reed City we changed to the F. & P. M. road and arrived at Saginaw at noon. After a halt for dinner the train sped on toward Monroe, and we arrived at Romulus at 3:30. During a halt of two hours here we had a good supper and gathered enough wild flowers for a button hole bouquet. Took the Wabash at 5:30 and came to Britton and thence over the M. & O. road home, arriving here at 7:46 Saturday evening.

We were gone from home just six days and never enjoyed a trip better. The weather could not have been improved upon—barring the storm on Little Traverse bay—and that did'nt hurt our feelings half so much as it did the ladies bonnets. We had plenty to eat and drink and the best of company. We can step back into the editorial harness on our return with a clearer head and a more cheerful heart. Those six days were not thrown away.

The Adrian annual school meeting was held last Monday evening. It was a very quiet and harmonious meeting. P. H. Burnham and Prof. Cocker were chosen trustees.

THE FIRST HORSE RACE.

Promptly at half past two o'clock last Thursday afternoon, Bidwell's black colt and Harry Lee's bay were called up at Bids' race track to speed the first heat for a $20 purse. The track as well as the horses was in good condition and they started off at a good trot. The black colt took the lead at the start and kept it, coming in about three lengths ahead. The second, and last, heat was a repetition of the first, the black horse coming in ahead. A good many people went down to the track with the expectation of seeing some 2:40 time made, not seeming to realize the fact that both horses were young green colts, not used to trotting, and were greatly disappointed at not seeing a Maud S. or a Jay-Eye-See flying around the track. No official time was given by the judges, but some of the audience who kept the time put the fastest at about 2:40. The running race of half mile dash between Will Eccles and Grant Hanford's mustangs was more exciting and was short and sharp. Hanford's horse took the lead, but was quickly overhauled by its opponent, who came in about two lengths ahead, making the half mile in sixty seconds.

THE LATEST FISH STORY.

Saturday—"I say, Will, I hear you have been a fishing. How many fish did you catch?"

"Our entire catch, by actual count, mounted to forty."

Sunday—"So you have been on a trip to Sand Lake, have you, Fred? What luck?"

"Never had better luck—We bagged two hundred and forty fish."

Monday—"I hear, Will, that you had a tremendous run of luck at Sand Lake last week—now honest, how many fish did you catch?"

"To tell the truth we didn't count them, but there must have been at least four hundred and forty."

Tuesday—"And say, Fred, you take the cake as the boss fisherman. Now just between you and I, tell me exactly how many you got."

"Well, I wouldn't want to name an exact number, but I think it safe to say that we got six hundred and forty."

Wednesday—"I hear big yarns, Will, about your fisherman's luck last week. Are they true?"

"Well, I don't want the story to get into the newspapers, but I will state confidentially to you that we caught seven hundred and forty fish."

Thursday—"Isn't that fish story with which you are connected, Fred, somewhat exaggerated?"

"Not in the least, my dear sir. Our total catch, big and little, amounted to eight hundred and forty fish."

In explanation of the above we would state that Postmaster Rosacrans and Will Kies spent three days at Sand Lake last week on a fishing excursion, and we have faithfully chronicled the situation up to the hour of going to press this afternoon.

Capt. Rose Atlas took his base ball nine to Franklin Center last Sunday to wrestle with a nine composed of Adrianites and Wolf Creekers. Sunday games seem to be popular in Franklin as a crowd of about 300 people were present to see the sport. The Tecumseh club came off victorious by a score of 10 to 7.

Ed. Smith met with quite a serious accident last Friday. While sawing some boards at Temple, McClure & Co's planing mill, he accidentally put his hand on the buzz saw and badly cut three of the fingers on his left hand across the knuckles. By good care he will probably save his fingers, but will have a stiff hand to show for it.

The resignation of Rev. C. E. Conley as Pastor of the Baptist church, was presented on Sunday, July 5th. Last Sunday it was considered at a church meeting and a committee was appointed to interview Mr. Conley and induce him to withdraw his resignation. We sincerely hope that he may be prevailed upon to remain. During his residence in Tecumseh, Bro Conley has made a host of friends not only within but without his own church communion and we should regret to have him leave town.

Harry Stevens' base ball nine went over to Adrian last Friday to play the return game with the nine that played in Tecumseh two weeks ago. When they arrived at the grounds it was found that the Adrian "kid nine" had been reinforced with four or five players from the college and high school clubs. The Tecumseh team didn't propose to kick, however, and they bravely waded in and got gloriously defeated, the score standing 19 to 3 in Adrian's favor. They played a good field game, but the Adrian pitcher was too much for them, they couldn't hit his balls. They will play again in Tecumseh in the near future.

Mrs. N. B. Bacon, of Toledo, sister of President Cleveland, was in Tecumseh one day last week as the guest of Mrs. P. J. Welling. Mr. Bacon is a prominent and well-known architect of Toledo.

Among those present from the village were Mrs. Geo. Marsden, Mrs. Robt. Stretch, Mrs. James Mitchell, Mrs. Sheldon and others. Also Mrs. L. D. Dewey and daughters from the Valley. A very enjoyable time was passed by all present.

On Thursday afternoon of last week Mrs. John Butrick, of Franklin, gave birth to triplets, all girls and weighing six pounds each. The mother seemed to be recovering from the ordeal satisfactorily, when she suddenly sank and expired. The children at last accounts were alive and doing finely. Mrs. Butrick was a daughter of Deacon Stanley and was highly esteemed by all who knew her. Her sad death has cast a gloom over the entire community.

Adrian Record: We regret much to chronicle a misfortune to our esteemed friend T. M. H. He has lost his traveling satchel, and is "out" considerably also, in sums spent in telegraphing. Two weeks have elapsed and still nothing is heard from it. The satchel was not very valuable of itself, but it contained his other shirt, and his embarassment increases as the chance of its recovery diminishes. This is a harrowing tale of a lost shirt.

Adrian Times: Company B, through Secretary Bond, is in receipt of letters from Surgeon C. M. Woodward, of Tecumseh, and Assistant Surgeon Sullivan, both of the First regiment, thanking the company, and the citizens of Adrian, for their entertainment here on the Fourth. The Tecumseh polo club went to Monroe last Tuesday afternoon on invitation from the club of that city to play a match game of polo at their rink in the evening. One of the members of the Tecumseh team was seen this morning, and said the boys had a "dandy" time. Two games were played, one Tuesday evening and one Wednesday afternoon. The first was an all rush game and our boys won three out of five goals, and the same in the game Wednesday afternoon. The boys are loud in their praise of the Monroe club for the gentlemanly manner in which they were treated, and hope to return the compliment some day.

SCATTERED SPACES AND QUADS.

Collected Together after Reading the Proof of Our Sketch of the Press Excursion.

The President's of both Press Associations were too modest.

Don't you wish we had gone round by the lakes on our return home?

That darkey waiter at the Arlington will know better next time we visit are to eat.

The editors who stopped at the Park House made quite a point for the closing toast.

Several of the young men got massed, and lost their way coming home one night.

As an assistant baggage master Editor Coggeshall, of the Hudson Gazette takes the cake.

A dinner served from the dining room of the Arlington is worth going a little the way to Petoskey to see.

The paper read by T. S. Appersonett of the Adrian Times was one of the best papers read during the entire session.

Brain food was plenty at the Park House. 4300 pounds of fish were consumed there during the sojourn of the excursionists.

One of the natives at Walton allowed that the party must be the first installment of patients bound for the new insane asylum.

Bro. Field, of the News looked rather crestfallen at first without his wife, but there were lots of pretty girls and he soon caught on.

Congressman Seth C. Moffatt has a fine residence at Traverse, and was one of the most efficient members of the reception committee.

A search for a stray grip sack among the Petoskey hotels is enough to even disturb the equanimity of one of the imperturbable Smiths.

There are enough summer resorts in Northern Michigan to accommodate all the Northwestern states, with New England and New Jersey thrown in.

L. J. Smith, of Adrian, was one of the main spokes in the Lenawee county delegation. His jokes were never better and he always had one on tap.

Much of the success of the Traverse City reception was due to the efficient and untiring labors of Thos. T. Bates of the Herald, and E. L. Sprague, of the Eagle.

A sail on Little Traverse bay, during a thunder storm is very exhilarating, especially when your overcoat and umbrella are locked up in your room at the hotel.

It was something quite remarkable and to be thankful for, that in an excursion of that magnitude and duration, not a single accident of any kind occurred. There were ludicrous mishaps without number, but nobody was hurt.

Among the old acquaintances who turned up on the trip were Rev. W. J. Stoutenburgh and wife. Mr. S. was formerly pastor of the Presbyterian church of Tecumseh and is now conducting the Leader at Marlette, Sanilac county.

Chas. S. Hampton, President of the Western Association, orated at Adrian on the 4th, and went out on the special train Monday morning over the F. & P. M. road. He was with the party until they broke ranks on Friday, and was untiring in his efforts to promote the comfort and enjoyment of the fraternity.

While the excursionists were being transferred from the City of Traverse to the Faxton, off Charlevoix, President Hampton stood at the gang plank and solemnly warned them to collect all their baggage and take it with them. Upon arriving at Charlevoix, Mr. Hampton discovered that his own luggage had been left behind and gone on to Chicago.

The railroads of the state deserve the thanks of the fraternity for courtesies extended, while the G. R. & I. and the F. & P. M. have placed the press under extra obligations to them for the special trains provided and other accommodations furnished the excursionists. These two roads are Michigan railroads, entirely under Michigan control, and Michigan citizens have good reason to be proud of them.

A serious accident befell our friend Boughton of the Marquette Chronicle. As he was saunteringdown the Main street of Traverse he was accosted by the Hopton bitters man, who offered him $50 dollars for his photograph. Greatly surprised, Bough ventured the reason of so strange an offer and what use he wished to make of his picture. The shrewd bitters man said that he wished his picture to illustrate on their bitters bottles before taking.—Battle Creek Call.

A. H. Finn, of Port Huron, who was one of the floor managers at the Arlington ball, was down on the program as A. H. Sinn. It is rumored that his original name was Sinn, and that he was a relative of Ah Sinn, whom Brett Hart mentions in the "Heathen Chinee." By a special act of the Legislature in 1883 his name was changed from Sinn to Finn. Some one conversant with this fact had his ancestral name inserted on the program. The affidavits are on file at this office.—Battle Creek Call.

The route from Traverse City to Petoskey passes an oasis of land bearing the unromantic name of Hog Island, to which open strong exception was taken by those on board the steamer City of Traverse that a meeting was called, a president chosen and a motion made to change the name from Hog Island to Press Island. This gave rise to a discussion as to whether a change from Hog to Press would not be merely a distinction without a difference. All appeared sorry to do anything if it would give any island with the objectionable name, and therefore, at off-hand by acclamation Hog Island was christened Dewey Island.—Adrian Record.

Bro Rapids Herald: The office of the Herald has been away this week, attending the Press convention up north here. If this issue of the Herald is more spicy and readable than usual, the credit belongs to the office force. It is not often that Mr. Nisbett accommodates his readers by absenting himself from duty. When last seen by a Record scribe Nisbett was a most forlorn looking object. The first table at Traverse City was being fed and Nisbett with an extremely hollow stomach stood leaning against a post for support, waiting for the dining room doors to open to him and feeling that it was time to kick but he had not strength enough.—Adrian Record.

The teacher's have all been engaged for the coming school year. We give their names and positions respectively:

Passenger Agent McHugh and Auditor Annital of the M. & O. road were in town yesterday and spent the afternoon. The object of their visit was to establish an uptown ticket-office, and they placed the agency with A. E. Kennedy in the post office building. This arrangement will be a decided convenience to the traveling public, and they could not have made a better selection for a local agent. Mr. Kennedy will receive a supply of tickets in a week or so.

The Tecumseh cornet band boys are circulating a subscription paper to raise funds to purchase new uniforms with. As an inducement to our citizens to aid them, they purpose giving a free open air concert at least once a week. They can blow when attired in their old clothes, that is true, but they have an ambition to become a first class band and to keep abreast of the times. Give the boys a lift.

Last Saturday, being the anniversary of Ed. Rowland's wedding day, some of his friends organized a surprise party and took his house by storm about tea time. About fifty guests were present, who were entertained with a fine picnic supper and passed a jolly evening. Mr. and Mrs. John Heesen were the ring leaders in the mischief.

Jack Turner, a son of Joe Turner, who was the foreman of Hayden's stave mill a few years since, is in town this week on a visit. Jack has been South for the past seven years, and is now located at New Orleans as yard master in the "Queen & Crescent" depot. He has a responsible position and gets a salary of $115 per month.

C. A. Blackmar, of Cambridge, was in town yesterday.

THE EAST.

The autopsy upon the body of the late Commander Gorringer shows that death resulted from a cancer around and pressing upon the spinal cord. Appearances indicate that it existed for several months prior to that accident.

MISSING.

The Expressive Word Which Often Indicates the Fate of Steamships.

"Throb! throb! throb!"

As regular as the beat of the human heart—more regular than the human pulse. It is the revolution of the steamer's screw—something heard from end to end and side to side of the great ship.

From dawn to dark—from dark to dawn—never missing a beat. Let the great ship's heart miss that beat—let the jar cease for a moment in mid-ocean, and the chill of fear will strike every passenger's heart. They know that only a single plank separates them from the relentless waters—that a rod—a pin—a bolt—a crank—may snap at any moment and render the huge ship as helpless as a log.

There is treachery in the waters when they lap and gurgle and run softly up on the sands, and break so still that a sleeping infant would be soothed to deeper slumber. There is fire abroad. Under the boilers down in the dark hold—in the cook's galley—in half a dozen other places lurks a fiend who may spring up at any moment and clasp the huge ship in his fiery arms.

The sky is without a cloud, but an hour hence may bring a hurricane which will vex ocean and land until every living thing cries out in supplication. Puff! puff! puff! It is the exhaust of steam. It is steam controlled by watchful eyes and experienced hands. Let it but secure the mastery for a moment and the heavens will be rent by an explosion. Straight ahead in her path, but miles away, is a ghastly obstruction. It creeps—creeps—creeps—moved by some mysterious current. It is an iceberg of such dimensions that the great steamship is a button compared to the monster fly-wheel of a 2000 horse-power engine. On the starboard bow is a bark under full sail—on the port bow a steamer coming head on.

Throb! throb! throb!

And the men and women and children go to their beds and sleep in peace and dream sweet dreams. Bye and bye a fog creeps up—coming without whisper or footfall—coming as a deadly scourge enters a city and silently marks its victims with the touch of death. The man on the bridge reaches for a better glass—seems a trifle uneasy. The lookouts rub their eyes and start up as if half suspecting they had slept for a moment, and a hand is raised to the fog-whistle.

"Boom! boom! boom!"

Here and there a nervous sleeper may start up at the sound, but only to sleep again. All is well.

Through the darkness—through the black mantle of the fog—throbbing, breathing, living—the great iron monster pushes her way, and every few seconds the omnious sound of the whistle booms out to be caught up by the wreaths and smothered in the folds which are pressing down as if to smother their victim.

Throb! throb! Boom! boom! But all is well!

Overdue by five days, but no cause for anxiety. Ten days but she may have broken a shaft. Twenty days—she must be lost, but there are hopes that some of the people got safely away in boats. Six months—a year—two—three—five. Never a word nor a line—not so much as a bit of driftwood. It is simply: "Missing."—Detroit Free Press.

THE HAY CROP.

A Product Which Should Be Secured in the Best Possible Condition.

From what has been learned of the difference in value between good and bad hay, through the labors and investigations of chemists, it should be the effort of every farmer to secure this crop in the very best condition. The tables of values of fodders, which have been made up from the most careful analysis by many skillful agricultural chemists, and which are fully trustworthy in this respect, show that hay varies more than one hundred per cent. in nutritive value, poor hay being worth forty cents per one hundred pounds, while the best hay is worth eighty-five cents, these figures showing the comparative values. Thus, if poor hay, made so in the cutting and curing, is worth $8 per ton to the farmer, the same crop made of the best quality by the best management would be worth $17 per ton. This difference is so large that it is very important for farmers to understand precisely how hay is spoiled or preserved in its best state.

There are three ways in which hay is spoiled, viz.: By weeds, by cutting at the wrong time and by faulty curing. Either of these may make poor hay of what might be good grass, but when all three faults exist the hay must be poor indeed. Weeds are the bane of our grass fields. It is rare to see a field just now as it ripens to the harvest that is free from noxious weeds, the glaring or eye daisy being the chief of the tribe. It is not uncommon to see good grass so intermingled with vile weeds, such as Canada thistles, ragweed, burdocks, the aforesaid daisies, briers, brambles, toad flax and a score more, that it is even pernicious to stock and might better be burned than kept to be a source of danger and loss and the means of further spreading these pests. Persons who have become acquainted with what is known as "baled hay" have lively ideas and recollections of the fact here pointed out.

But it is unfair to suggest even that this fault is half so common as that of the spoiling of hay by too late cutting. Chemically considered for its nutriment, grass cut when approaching the blossoming stage is worth twenty-five cents per hundred pounds when green, while the same grass cut when past the blossom is worth for feeding only seventeen cents per hundred pounds. Here is a loss of sixty-six per cent., which in any other business would be ruinous and soon end in bankruptcy, and the Sheriff would be called to bury the remains. It may be, as it is alleged by farmers who cut their grass very late and in its poorest condition, that the late crop is heavier, but then it is the only crop that can be cut in the season, while the only slightly lighter crop will be followed by a second cutting later, and the two cuttings will be twice as valuable and heavier than the one. The most frequent mistake, perhaps, is made in the curing. A good deal that is new has been learned in regard to this from the numerous investigations which have been made into the process of ensilage, and we know now that the process of curing in the cock, with as little exposure to the sun and wind as is far preferable to the common one of thoroughly air and sun drying the grass and putting it so in the barn while it is so dry as to lose a large, and the better portion of it in the leaves. This method of curing has been described so often that it is not necessary to repeat any more here than that it consists in putting up the hay cut in the morning and dried by exposure all day, from outside moisture, into tall conical heaps or cocks, which are covered, if need be, with cloth caps as a protection from the rain, and thus leaving the hay until the whole crop has been cut and cured, when it is hauled to the barn. The slight fermentation undergone in the cock cures the hay thoroughly without any loss of substance or aroma, but preserves all the fine odor and sweetness, and leaves it dry enough to go into the barn in the very best possible condition.—*N. HOUSE CONSTRUCTION.

Some Extraordinary Architectural Suggestions.

A house can be made warm in winter and cool in summer by a simple, and not very expensive process. It is well known to most persons that the air of mines and caverns is always of the same temperature, for the reason that they are below the influence of the temperature at the surface. They are not affected by the cold of winter nor the heat of summer. Let us try to make a practical application of this important fact. This may be done by laying a large sewer pipe, so cemented as to be impervious to the surrounding air and water, at least ten or twelve feet under ground, the inner end opening into our air chamber in the basement. This pipe should be extended at that depth a distance of not less than 100 feet and better 200 in any convenient direction, there to end in a perpendicular ventilating shaft, which should extend at least ten feet above the ground, and be protected by a hood which should freely admit the air, but keep out rain and snow. In winter this air would be warmed, in passing through the pipe to a temperature like that of the ground surrounding the pipe, which would not be far from 50 deg. F. All we would have to do then would be to raise it 20 deg. more, or to 70 deg. by our heating apparatus. Suppose we have a temperature of 10 deg. below zero, not an uncommon occurrence in this State, our supply pipe would warm it without expense to about 50 deg., making a clear gain of 60 deg., having only to raise the temperature 20 deg. to bring it to 70 deg., the desired temperature, instead of raising it 80 deg. on the ordinary plan. It would certainly result in a great saving of fuel.

In Summer, when the temperature is 90 deg. or more, the air will be cooled down to the temperature of the earth, to the same temperature it was in Winter, or nearly so. Suppose it enters our air chamber at 60 deg.; we then close the doors and windows, and the heated air of the house will naturally ascend through channels provided for that purpose, and the cool air from the chamber will ascend to supply its place. The result would be a delightful coolness throughout the house, without a penny of expense except for the original plant. This plan, we believe, is entirely feasible, is comparatively inexpensive, and, if successfully accomplished, is very economical.—F. C. Hunter, before an Indiana Medical Association.

THE GRINDSTONE AND GAP.

Employments Which Try the Soul of the Small Boy.

It is an old saying among the farmers that there is no employment more trying than turning a grindstone or "mending a gap." The grindstone could have been introduced during the dark ages as an instrument of torture. Turning the crank is such miserable work that the men, foregoing it with noble resignation, compel a boy to take it in hand. When a strong man with a scythe blade appears, the boy's heart sinks. He is told that grinding it will not require a very long time, but he knows better. It may be unconscious strength, but it seems that the man takes a special delight in bearing unnecessarily hard on the stone. No ties of affection are strong enough to prevent this additional cruelty. The boy wonders why a man can be so heartless, but when he becomes a man and when his boy turns the crank, he bears on the stone.

The "gap" season comes in the autumn when the corn is being gathered. A panel of the fence is being let down and as it would be too inconvenient to close the opening every time the wagon passes through, a boy is stationed there to keep the cattle from going into the field. He sits down on a rail. A hog comes along and the boy throws a chunk at him. A cow comes and while the boy is paying attention to her, the hog comes within one of running through the gap. The sunshine, just warm enough to exert a drowsy influence, causes the boy to nod. The wind, rustling the yellow leaves of a neighboring tree, sinks into breezy music. The boy leans back and places his head on a rail. Pleasant visions float before him. The breezy music grows fainter. The visions are deepened into dreams.

"Get up there! What in thunder are you doing?"

The boy springs to his feet. The wagon has arrived. The cow and a dozen hogs are in the field. The farmers are right. There is no employment more trying than turning a grindstone or "mending a gap."—Arkansaw Traveler.

Father, Mother, and Three Sisters Dead.

Mr. David Claypool, formerly Sergeant-at-Arms of the New Jersey Senate, and now Notary Public at Cedarville, Cumberland Co., N. J., makes the following startling statement: "My father, mother, and three sisters all died with consumption, and my lungs were so weak I raised blood. Nobody thought I could live. My work (shipsmithing) was very straining on me with my weak constitution, and I was rapidly going to the grave. While in this condition I commenced using Mishler's Herb Bitters, and it saved my life. Because it was so difficult to get it in this little place, and I had improved so much, I stopped taking it for a time, and the result is that I have commenced going rapidly down hill again. Somehow, Mishler's Herb Bitters gives appetite and strengthens and builds me up as nothing else does, and I must have a dozen bottles at once. Use this communication as you please, and if any one wants to be convinced of its truth, let them write me and I will make affidavit to it, for I owe my life to Mishler's Herb Bitters."

The secret of the almost invariable relief and cure of consumption, dysentery, diarrhea, dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver complaints, when Mishler's Herb Bitters is used, is that it contains simple, harmless, and yet powerful ingredients, that act on the blood, kidneys, and liver, and through them strengthens and invigorates the whole system. Purely vegetable in its composition; prepared by a regular physician; a standard medicinal preparation; endorsed by physicians and druggists. These are four strong points in favor of Mishler's Herb Bitters. Mishler's Herb Bitters is sold by all druggists. Price $1.00 per large bottle. 6 bottles for $5.00.

Ask your druggist for MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS. If he does not keep it, do not take anything else, but send a postal card to MISHLER HERB BITTERS CO., 525 Commerce Street, Philadelphia.

CLINTON CHAPTER.

A couple of itinerant chiropodists held forth on the corners of Main and Tecumseh streets Friday and Saturday nights. Their long hair and persuasive eloquence drew out large crowds both nights.

Mrs. Laura Tuttle left here Monday afternoon for Tecumseh from which place she expected to start Wednesday morning for the west. She will visit relatives in Davenport, Iowa, Leavenworth, Kansas, and in several other places.

Miss Grace Stevens, of Jonesville, is visiting her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Moses Bartlett, of this place.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES

Hot! Hotter!! Hottest!!!

We need rain very much.

Upwards of fifteen took in the excursion at Devil's Lake Sunday.

G. W. Clark & Son and S. P. Smith are up with the times in the way of screen doors at the front doorway of their store.

Mrs. Floyd Florence and Miss Millie Kelly, of Holloway, visited Mrs. Morris Kelly Wednesday of last week.

Mr. A. Doty and Mrs. C. A. Sharp, of Tecumseh, spent a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Peter Sharp on Thursday of last week.

Miss Hettie Moore, of Saline, has been engaged to teach the fall term of school in Dist. No. 1 fractional Ridgeway and Macon.

Mr. James Cole, of Tecumseh was in our village Wednesday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Simmons, of Raisin, made Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Jackson a farewell visit, Saturday.

G. W. Jackson went to Ithica Monday to see his farm there.

John Housman left for Clinton Co., Monday.

S. P. Smith's children have the whooping cough at present.

Miss Josie Schreder, of Tecumseh, was the guest of Miss Ella Jackson from Friday until Monday.

Mrs. M. A. Barrett very nicely entertained her daughters and their husbands and children Friday evening, serving ice cream etc.

Those Saturday eve. buggy thieves that Tecumseh is pestered with, relieved B. F. DePuy of a hat, shirt, a quantity of meat, and several other articles last Saturday night. Mr. DePuy says he does not care for anything but the beefsteak, and hopes the fellow that got it will be terribly sick.

Mrs. Mary Arner and her son Sammy left for Hartford, Mich., on Monday evening to spend a few weeks with her brother Harrison Heath and his daughter Nellie. Miss Heath's health is very poorly. It is hoped with good care she will improve rapidly.

Weddie Bush and Sammy Arner while fooling with a breech-loading rifle, in Mrs. Mary Arner's house on Monday, accidently discharged the contents, the ball passing through the screen door, just missing W. H. Arner's house. The boys have been warned of their carelessness with their guns before, and as this is the second offence the citizens are going to look into the matter and see what can be done.

G. W. Jackson having traded his property in the village for an 80 acre farm near Ithaca, Gratiot Co., will move with his family to Hillsdale, next week, where he is to superintend the furniture business of his brother-in-law, Mr. A. Palmer. Mr. Jackson came to our village Nov. 20th 1860 and commenced the wagon trade with his uncle W. H., and his cousin W. H. Arner. He has worked at the same bench ever since, nearly twenty-five years. Ridgeway will lose a fine family and good citizens in their going away.

W. P. Cadmus while cutting wheat with his binder last Tuesday, got off to fix the binding part, and when he got back on and started up, the line caught under the tongue of the binder, and the team became frightened and ran away. Mr. Cadmus being unable to control them tried to throw the machine out of gear and was thrown off and hurt about the back, but not seriously. The team ran about 40 rods and jumped a staked railed fence and was caught by the men that were setting up grain. The horses were not hurt very much and the binder was but slightly broken. Mr. Cadmus is about at this writing.

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

Rain at last,
The earth is still thirsty.
Corn is in tassel.

The golden grain is fumbling to the murderous self-binder.

Wednesday, July 15, at 7:55 P. M. W. A. Phillips was made the happiest man on the ridge. Cause, a bouncing girl baby, weighing 9 pounds. Both mother and child are doing finely.

Hon. C. R. Henry visited his mother last Thursday. Run over his farm on the county line, turned once around, and Friday made his way back to wife and son at AuSable.

About 9 o'clock last Sunday eve, Levi Meade, a carpenter here, witnessed a strange celestial phenomenon. Sitting on his porch he noticed a great glowing mass slowly descending, when it had nearly reached the earth it exploded with some noise and sent forth sparks and glowing balls of fire in every direction. He says it equalled any Fourth of July celebration he ever saw.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Mrs. Dr. Begel has gone to Hanover to visit friends in that vicinity.

Most of the wheat is cut in this neighborhood and a considerable of it is already secured.

Will and Al Kelley started their thresher on Wednesday at Dan Anthony's.

Wm. Brainard has got his broom shop running again.

Mrs. Garrison Moore, of Hanover, is visiting her people in Raisin.

W. C. Scott is making a success of colt breaking. He now has his barn full and is getting them in good shape. If you have got any bad ones let Scott take them a little while.

Al. Macham's team started up the road the other day with the binder without a driver. After going a short distance they hitched onto the board fence which called them to a halt. Better to be born lucky than rich.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Our annual school meeting is among incidents that were, and nobody got hurt though four ladies attended and three had sufficient courage to vote. It was not as demoralizing to their nervous systems as expected; very like the first shock produced by ones first love letter, which if reduced to words would be, Good gracious! what shall I do! There did not seem much to be done in the case. A couple of lamps, too far apart to be neighbors, and three or four smoky lanterns perched on window-sills, produced such a foreground as made all the handsome folks look like ghosts done in smut. So the plain had no need to shrink from view. Having been accustomed to the grand parade of names, and fussy review of qualifications that is indispensable at the election of sewing-society officers, we could not help admiring the straight work plan of naming but one candidate for the vacant chair, and supposing there was nothing else to do, we dropped our paper in the hat, and at the reckoning found out the spirit had moved some to make silent nominations, and though one was called, many were chosen. It was fortunate for simplicity that one could not choose awry by accepting the man proposed, yet it looks as if no harm would been done if a competitor had been mentioned. The other trustee was made his own successor by dispensation of Providence, unless his friends had been holding a unanimity meeting previous. One thing is certain. Women have much to learn or unlearn, or the chances of doing harm as well as good with the ballot will be about even. Ladies who have not been initiated may not act as awkward as their Brooklyn sisters if they remember this. When you enter a school-room crowded with gentlemen, and each looks as if he expected lightning to strike him every moment, it is a school meeting, of the annual kind, and not a bit dangerous if you take seats next the wall.

A. P. Cook attended the Soldiers' Home meeting, and D. B. Ayres advises praying for it to be located here, but if a wholly disinterested committee has been appointed, the architect of nature has furnished a claim on their favor, which if the others beat fairly, we will not envy their winning.

DEVIL'S LAKE DOINGS.

The annual re-union of the 18th, Mich., takes place in Allen's new grove near the R. R. station, Aug. 26, on which occasion there will be music, speeches, bunting, patriotism and enthusiasm displayed, but no buncome. The G. A. R. begin their encampment the same day on the opposite side of the lake, less than half a mile distant.

There will be a harvest dance in the large hall of the Devils Lake House, Friday evening, July 31st.

A party of about twenty couple from Parma, encamp in Allen's picnic hall and grove for a two weeks' vacation, next week.

The Steamer makes regular trips to the afternoon trains and the City of Adrian is on hand too, if there is wind.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Fine weather for harvesting and farmers are getting most through.

The wonderful Okalawa lineament struck the town last night and warts and corns were taked out and teeth extracted without pain.

Mr. and Mrs. John Britton are visiting friends in Crawford Co.

The Britton Cornet band will hold an ice cream social Friday evening, July 31st, at the residence of William Britton for the benefit of the band. The Blissfield band will be in attendance. Come one and all and hear one of the best bands in Lenawee county play, and enjoy yourselves.

Thermometer way up in the nineties and still going—somebody please call a halt.

Haying all done and all in good shape. The crop is above the average in quality and quantity.

Everybody is busy in the harvest field. Wheat is up to the average.

John Britton and wife are taking a vacation at Roscommon, visiting Mrs. B's brother.

Mrs. John Exelby was called to her sick sister in Cleveland yesterday.

The brick work of the school house is done. Plastering is to be done at once.

Mr. Borden is making improvements in his new place. He is soon to move.

Business is dull.

Mr. Morris Britton tends the pumps and target during his father's absence.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly

For August opens with a readable and profusely illustrated article on the Bartholdi Statute, by Mr. James B. Townsend. "Within the Capes," by Earnest Ingersoll, is a breezy, historical and descriptive article, with ten illustrations. Lieut. Hughes, of the U. S. Navy, contributes a chapter on "Our New Steel Cruisers and their Uses," with engravings of the Dolphin, the Chicago, the Boston, and the guns to be placed on them. A notable article is that on the "Wits and Beauties of the Eighteenth Century," by Amelia E. Barr, with its ten portraits of the noted English beauties of that period. Another finely illustrated article is "A Run to Gibraltar, by C. F. Gordon Cumming; and the article on "Nathaniel Hawthorne" is accompanied by a portrait of Hawthorne in youth, the "Old Manse," his study in the Tower, the "Wayside," and three scenes from his works. The scientific article in this number is "The Torch-bearers of the Sea, by C. F. Holden, on phosphorescent fish. Fiction is well provided in the serial, "Of Two Evils," and five short stories. In addition there are numerous short articles and some fine poems. Published by Mrs. FRANK LESLIE, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York City, at 25cts a number, or $3 a year, postpaid.

"The ladies especially go into ecstacies over Parker's Hair Balsam," writes Mr. J. H. Decker, druggist, of Finlay, Ohio. They say it is the most elegant dressing they ever used." Stops falling hair, restores color, promotes growth.

The wheat crop in this section is being gathered in excellent condition. With continued dry weather all the wheat about Tecumseh will be in shock before Saturday night.

THE FOURTH EXCURSION.

The fourth grand excursion to Devils Lake over the M. & O., will take place on Sunday next, July 26th. These excursions are growing in popularity and afford a day of recreation for almost nothing. This trip can be taken from Tecumseh at an expense of not exceeding $1.00 for railroad fare, dinner and boat ride.

The low rates of fare and the unusual attractions this resort presents to pleasure seekers are fast making this Lake one of the most popular resorts within reach of the people. A pleasant ride of two hours by train from Toledo lands the party at the north end of the Lake, where is situated "The Devils Lake House," a large, new and well appointed Summer Hotel. A delightful sail of four miles down the lake brings the excursionists to the south end of the Lake, either to the "Lake View House" or "Allen's Landing," both large and well improved resorts.

Commodious and reliable steamers meet all trains and make trips around the lake during the day, carrying passengers at nominal rates. Boating, fishing, bathing and all other means of recreation will be found in abundance at all of these places, while beautiful groves are fitted up for the accommodation of picnic parties. Below is the time table and fare for the round trip:

Toledo.....	8 30	A. M....	75	cents.
Dundee.....	9 30	"	60	"
Britton.....	9 52	"	50	"
Ridgeway..	9 57	"	45	"
Tecumseh..	10 07	"	40	"
Tipton.....	10 25	"	30	"
Onsted	10 38	"	20	"

Returning the train will leave the lake at 6 P. M., arriving at Toledo at 8:30; giving excursionists eight hours at the Lake.

Pastry Without Butter.

The American pie has been subjected to more unjust abuse from foreign writers than any other of our distinctive products, if we except the recent tirade against the American hog. And yet we cannot say that it has been altogether undeserved, because of the villianous compound, thick, hard and heavy, that is too often made to do duty as a "crust," and which by courtesy is called "pastry." Light tender, flaky, and digestible pie-crust and all kinds of pastry can be made most readily by the use of Royal Baking Powder without any butter, or with half the usual portion, if preferred, or with a small quantity of lard or other shortening as desired. Pie-crust thus made is much more wholesome and digestible, besides being more economical and easier prepared. In addition to saving all the butter if desired, one-third the flour is also dispensed with, as the crust is rolled that much thinner, and leavening qualities of the Royal Baking Powder swelling it to the requisite thickness. If drippings or lard be used, the Royal Baking Powder removes any unpleasant taste, rendering the crust as short sweet and pleasant as if made from the finest butter. Those who know the appetizing qualities of the genuine home-made American pie will rejoice that by the aid of Royal Baking Powder in the pastry it can be made quite as digestible as it is delicious.

Errors in Printing.

Painstaking people, who know next to nothing about printing, find a special delight in searching out typographical errors in newspapers, periodicals and books, the detection of a blunder, in their own estimation, putting a premium on individual intelligence—conferring a privilege of disparaging printers. Men of intelligence, who write well but not legibly, never tire of pointing out mistakes of printers and the oversight of proof-readers. The self-constituted censor of typography may find food for wholesome reflection in the fact that about one hundred years ago a number of professors in Edinburgh University undertook the publication of a book which should be a perfect specimen of typographical accuracy. Every conceivable precaution was taken to prevent errors of the types. Six experienced proof-readers were employed, who devoted hours to the reading of each page. After their careful task was completed, each page was posted in the hall of the university, with the notification that £50 would be paid to any person who should succeed in discovering an error. Every page remained thus publicly exposed before being returned to the printing office. The proprietors of the work felt that the object so diligently striven for had been attained. Great was the discomfiture of the learned men when, on the book being issued, several errors were found, one occurring in the first line of the first page.—Printers' Circular.

THE ROMANCE OF A VOYAGE.

[illegible]

I am a [illegible] and [illegible] of the sad waters to a [illegible] left for a time.

She sat [illegible] and her head [illegible] toward the window as much as possible. I began to hope she would fall asleep. I believe I myself did fall asleep for a few moments. Again by I was roused by the falling of a book from my lap. When I opened my eyes I found my opposite neighbor's fixed upon me with a look of waiting for the opportunity I had given me. She had left off crying then, but she was looking very wan and ill.

She had her purse open in her hand.

"Shall I have money enough?" she asked me, leaning it toward me when I gave signs of being fast awake.

I took the little, pretty, tinsel purse in my hand.

"Yes, if you don't get cheated, and, as I am going to Rome to the [illegible] I will see to that, if you will show me."

"You are going to Rome?"

Such a light in the eyes and such a pretty, transient flush over the delicate face!

"Yes."

It was the state of her purse that had finally decided me.

She put the purse I returned to her back in her bag. After that, and when I pretended to be looking in another direction, I saw her sinking hands folded together, and was confident that her lips formed the words, "Thank God." Somehow I was more touched than I could have told reason for by this.

Two old ladies and old gentleman were nodding in the other compartment of the carriage.

For a long time I did not stir hand or foot, or look at my neighbor, hoping that her mind more at ease, she might catch the infection of their drowsiness. She did. When I did venture to look at her she was asleep. Her hat lay on her knee; her head was leaned back in the angle of the cushions. The light of the carriage-lamp—it had grown dusk now—slanted down from the bright hair, threw a shadow of long lashes on the pale cheek, fell on the pretty, round white throat; but it did not look easeful sleep—the mouth retained lines of anxiety and depression.

I secured the coupé of the diligence at one place in the long drive as far as Genoa. I sent a telegram to Toulon to request that my luggage, which I had left behind there, should be taken charge of till further notice. I dined at a hotel close to the diligence office, looking toward the windows of the house where I had left Miss Hawtree, and wondered dreamily what would come of this very strange adventure of mine.

I was sorry she had seen my name, otherwise I could have had the flattering notion to the soul that it was my face which had inspired her with confidence.

But what on earth could she have done had I not been there?

When I was tired of my moonlight ramblings to the shores of that wonderful bay of Nice, and went to my hotel, I found it was too late to be worth while going to bed that night, so I watched till morning.

I was at her hotel pretty early, anxious to settle her account before she should be troubled about it. I ordered breakfast to be taken to her in her room, and sent a pencilled message to her, telling her I had arranged every thing.

I shall not easily forget the earnestly grateful look she gave me when we met.

As I tucked her up snugly in the coupé, "Had she been comfortable?" I asked.

"O, yes; I had thought of every thing. I had been most kind," she answered, her eyes full of tears. And then, "Where was I going?" with a half-alarm in her tone and face, as she found I did not take my place beside her.

"To the banquette up above. I am your courier, mademoiselle; one sees better there, but this is fitter for a lady."

It was an early February morning; the sun and sky as bright as only a Riviera sun and sky could be; the Mediterranean could be.

We did not stop more than a few hours at Genoa. How long we were upon our route altogether I cannot distinctly remember. We had bad weather at one time, cold and rain, snow, wind and hail, that was, I think, in crossing the Apennines.

She never complained, though she got so benumbed with cold that she would have fallen but that I caught her [illegible]

[illegible]

I waxed to the head of the [illegible] and wanted there perhaps half an hour. Then she came to me—came close up to me, and laid her hand upon my arm. The expression of the pale face's eyes [illegible] to have told me there was a [illegible]. With a caressing word, I drew her to me. She leaned her forehead against my arm a moment then. "Frank wants to see you. Frank wants to thank you," she said, in a scarcely audible voice.

I followed her into the room.

The last light of a splendid sunset, from which one could see the Tiber, the Castle of St. Angelo, and the line of Mont Janiculus, was streaming on a low couch where my poor young schoolfellow lay.

I saw directly that life with him was a question of no more than days, perhaps only hours. Yet what a beautiful bright face it was still! What a light streamed from those radiant eyes, as he, without rising—he was past that—stretched both hands toward me.

Ruth was crouching by him; one hand soon clutched her again, the other grasped mine as I sat down by him.

In this strange world how often are simple deeds, that cost nothing to the poor, most richly rewarded! What had I done? What sacrifice had I made? And how they thanked and blessed me—he with his difficulty-spoken, faint words; she with her blessed eyes confirming his praises. A few words explained the case.

He had rallied after the first telegram, and had thought it needless that Ruth should come. He had not calculated on the possibility of her starting as immediately as she had done, and the second message, which bid her not come, had not reached her.

A few days after—two days since now—he had broken a blood-vessel, and had been pronounced beyond hope.

"If only I had known of this sooner!" I thought, as I looked at the miserable room and thought of my idle hundreds and thousands.

When, by-and-by—Ruth for a brief while absent—a woman living in the rooms below, who had been very kind to Frank, had taken her away to give her some refreshment, I stammeringly expressed, something of my regret, he answered:

"It is better as it is, for I am well content."

"Is your sweet sister free?" I asked—"free from any engagement—free-hearted?"

I spoke low and hastily, and felt in all my being how much hung upon his answer.

"My little Ruth? O, yes, as far as I can know. And she has never had any secrets from me."

"I love her," I responded. "If she can love me, I will do what a man can do to make a woman happy as a wife."

He did not immediately answer. He lay with closed eyes, but I felt the [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] every day, and always found some gentle and grateful message ready for me, but day after day I did not see her.

At last a bright day came when I did [illegible] she was more altered—more broken [illegible] that I had not guessed. I [illegible] of me as [illegible] for her [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] I had stood so, but I believe [illegible] when [illegible] of [illegible] mine, which hung down [illegible]

I started and [illegible]. She was [illegible] her own face [illegible] with pain and [illegible]

"I [illegible] so displeased," she said. "I [illegible] you so [illegible] and ungrateful. I cannot bear it."

Before I knew what she was going to do, she was kneeling [illegible] before I could prevent her [illegible] were [illegible] her soft lips.

[illegible]

He [illegible] her, I asked her, I am afraid almost [illegible]. "With you [illegible] me that you [illegible] me?"

"No, I cannot. I do love you—I love you very dearly."

FOREIGN GOSSIP.

—In a Cologne court a person was recently fined twelve dollars for refusing to take the oath, on the plea that he did not believe in a God.

—The German authorities, with a view to discourage emigration, have forbidden the railroads to carry emigrants at reduced rates.

—The Revue Bibliographique reports that in Paraguay a tribe of Indians with tails has been discovered. A Guaycuyos child of eight years was captured, with a tail a foot long.

—A Belgian editor who recently insulted a rival editor in the morning, fought a duel and killed him in the afternoon, and came out at 7 p. m. with a special evening edition describing the encounter.

—China, which only six years since had but six miles of telegraph lines, has now completed a system by which Canton, the capital of Southern China, is brought into direct communication with the metropolis of the north.

—Deaths from consumption in England and Wales are on the decrease. The number from 1860 to 1870 averaged over 55,000 annually, and from 1870 to 1880 between 51,000 and 52,000. Last year the number was 48,715 in a population of 26,413,862.

—Of the twenty volcanoes surrounding the ancient city of Quito the lowest is over 15,000 feet and the highest (Chimborazo) is nearly 22,000. Three are now active (Cotopaxi, Sangai, and Ciobincha), twelve are dormant, and the rest are extinct. Twenty-two summits are covered with perpetual snow.

—The "Rogues' Album," in the Berlin Criminal Police Court, did good service in 1884. 121 criminals having been identified by its means. In the same year 363 photographic portraits were added to its number, including those of 4 murderers, 53 burglars, 21 pickpockets, and 16 shop-lifters, making a total number of 3,822.

—No less than 4,536 relatives of English titled families are quartered on the public service. The drafts on the treasury for the sisters and aunts of dukes amount to $18,800,458, the brothers-in-law and nephews of marquises to $41,529,950, and the cousins, and others of earls to $240,906,010 per annum, or a total sum, going to prove John Bright's assertion that "the aristocracy lives on patronage," of $331,236,210.

—The recent account of the remarkable escape of a mother and several children from a shipwreck in which the vessel turned bottom upward recalls the fact that thirty years ago a schooner was washed upon the beach at Penzance bottom upward which was found to contain several men who after the capsizing had been tossing about inside for several days in the same position as that in which she had been washed ashore.

—One day when the ground was white with snow, Mme. Dorian, a great whip among the Paris "sportswomen," invited Victor Hugo to drive out and see the skaters in the Bois de Boulogne. As he got up beside her on the box of her turnout she remarked: "You have forgotten your overcoat, mon cher maitre." "My overcoat! I never had one; and I dress just the same way in winter as I do in summer. My overcoat is my youth."

—In a communication to the Academie des Sciences, M. Duclaux states that the presence of micro-organisms in the earth is essential to the germination of seed. His experiments were made with plants whose seed grow on the surface as well as those which develop in the ground. The agricultural importance of his researches lies in the fact that farmers who understand this principle will avoid the use on planted soils of any substance inimical to the lower forms of organic life.

JALAPA.

A Town That Has Occupied the Pen of Poet and Historian.

Among the most elevated peaks in Mexican territory rises the Cofre (Trunk) of Perote, on a colossal wall crowned by the Star Mountain, Orizava, which from a height of nearly eighteen thousand feet looks calmly out over the dark-blue waves of the Mexican gulf.

At the feet of the Cofre de Perote is the beautiful city of Jalapa, justly called the garden of the Republic, where brilliant birds sing their litanies and bright flowers wave unceasingly their perfumed censers. All the exuberance of the tropics surrounds Jalapa. The forests of lemons, oranges and mangoes reach out toward every point in the horizon, and the air is heavy with their perfume. Tall, graceful reeds rock in the breath of winds which waft lazily up from the torrid coast. Under the shadow of plantains grow the coffee plants. The tobacco leaves surcharge the atmosphere with their strong, peculiar scent, and recall the legend of the discovery of tobacco across the gulf in Yucatan centuries ago. The vanilla bean, with its precious extract and volatile oil, grow untended, its delicate aroma lost in the overpowering odors from a thousand open chalices of fruit and flower.

The bamboo sugar cane reaches an extraordinary height under the hot sky that bends above the canton of Jalapa. The reed-like water grass, carrying its nutritious freightage of rice, grows as rapidly as among the torrid marshes of India and China. The golden crowns of corn wave for miles along the sides of these Mexican Andes, and valuable dye and gum woods and scores of medicinal plants are found around Jalapa. Among the latter is jalap, the famous cathartic, first imported from this tropical town in 1610, but now comparatively rare in that vicinity.

Tiny torrents, struck from the granite mountains by some invisible Moses, ripple over the pebbly pavements of Jalapa, and, breaking into cascades, go singing over beds of marble to lose themselves in rushing rivers. Under a sky of amethyst lie the eternal snow that caps Orizava; the hardy pines lower down; the deep, dark forests; the wealth of tropical vegetation; every complexion of vegetable growth—arctic, temperate and tropic—on the steppes that slope from the summit to the sea.

The town of Jalapa is four thousand feet above sea-level, and seventy miles from Vera Cruz. This mountain is celebrated for the magnificence of its scenery, the beauty of its women, and the sweetness of its flowers. It has about ten thousand inhabitants. The chipi chipi, or light drizzling rain, that often falls on Jalapa, is about the only drawback to the tourist.

Jalapa was a town when Cortez first climbed the great mountains that encircle the City of Mexico. It was called Nalaya, and near by is the town of Perote, where the American prisoners were confined in 1847.

There are few towns in Mexico so happily situated. At a good height above the sea coast, it is on the edge of the plateau beyond which towers the summit of Maculteper, and while it overlooks the rich lowlands of the Sierra Caliente—Hot Lands—it escapes their baneful vapors. The town lost much of its importance as a commercial emporium by the opening of the Mexican Railway via Orizava from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico, but is now connected by tramway with the former. Among the stone buildings of this town stands the old Franciscan monastery, built in 1555, and looming up forever among the fragrant groves of Jalapa like a ghost to guard this paradise.—Mexico Two Republics.

THE TIMES OF THE END.

The Path of Progress the Path of Life—Prolonged Exertion Necessary.

There is many a seeming end of the world. Wherever the horizon touches the earth, whether it rests on mountain or plain, on land or on the sea, there is an end of the world, a seeming termination to all onward progress. So it is with the horizons of the mind and of the spirit. The end of school-days, the college graduation, the cutting short of a life in which one's own has been bound, retirement from active business effort—all these, and many more, may be to us so many ends of the world. A school prize may be the school-boy's horizon, shutting out all beyond; a college diploma may be the horizon of the student, and when that is won, it may seem as if the end of all had come. These are the perilous times—the times of the end. Shall the end of one's present world—the goal of one's present effort—be accepted as the final goal? Shall the man who has accomplished some present term of service rest content with that accomplishment or push on to find new worlds to conquer? When the traveler reaches the earthly horizon which had seemed to him to be the end of the world, he finds himself on the threshold of a new world which stretches away to a new end of the world. So should it be with those other horizons, and so every faithful spirit finds it to be with those horizons. The student finds that a wider world awaits him than that of school or college; the bereaved finds that a new path opens up for his lonely walking; the man who has scored his final business success finds that other accounts remain to be settled than those recorded in his ledgers. To each the path of progress is the path of life. Faithful performance in the past is crowned with failure unless it is continued in faithful performance of the new duties of the present. The end of the world is no end of the world at all; it is only a call into a new sphere with new opportunities of service. Happy they who pass beyond the end of the world into the newer world, to take up their fuller service with rejoicing.—S. S. Times.

TRAVELING CLOAKS, ETC.

Description of the Newest Styles Imported By Fashionable Modistes.

The newest traveling cloaks imported by fashionable modistes are of ecru canvas striped with colors, lined throughout with silk, and trimmed down the front with a long scarf of brown wool lace. These are very dressy indeed, and are made with loose square sleeves set in on the shoulders and down next the back forms, where they double under to meet the piece in front. Mohair wraps are trimmed with galloon or a little lace; but those meant for use rather than dress are plainly stitched near the edges. The more youthful dust cloaks are fitted to the figure in redingote style, with coat sleeves, and some fullness on the tournure in pleats or in French gauging. Still others are fitted smoothly over the hips, and have the skirt gathered or plaited to the edge. The latter are made either of pongee or of mohair; fawn or dust-colored mohair, with some bows of green ribbon and a hood lined with green silk, makes a stylish cloak. The French fancy for using this goods and gay colors for these wraps also extend to other sheer woolens, like veiling which comes in dark brown with pencil stripes of red, olive and blue upon it. This is made up in long redingote with a hood, and is provided on each side with a loop and button to fasten it up as a polonaise and display a red bison-cloth skirt that is worn under it. The wrap is, however, made very long, and may be worn over any other skirt, or over an entire dress. Bourette or tufted cloth of dark color is used for ulsters and redingotes, and there are also others of striped or plaid English cloths. Navy blue diagonal wool with red silk lining for the hood is popular for the English ulsters that are made with close-fitted front and belted back.

The serge and corduroy tailor jackets for traveling have been already noted. Perhaps the newest sacques are those of English checked homespun made with a belt across the short back, while the longer front is turned back down each side in revers that may be unbuttoned and lapped the opposite way to make the jacket double-breasted.—Harper's Bazar.

—A New Orleans doctor calls attention to a very simple fact which merits attention from medicine takers. If the medicine is mixed with very cold water, and a few swallows of water be taken as a preparatory dose, the nerves of the organ of taste become sufficiently benumbed to make the medicine nearly tasteless. The method will not disguise bitter tastes, but acts well in oils and salines.—N. O. Times.

The Perfumery Trade.

Some kinds of perfumery are worth their weight in gold. The export of fine perfumery is principally from Grasse, Nice, Cannes and Bremen. The business is divided into two parts. The manufacturer extracts from the flowers their essential oils. The perfumer buys these oils, pomades and extracts, and compounds them in several ways.

Only about a dozen of all the fragrant flowers in the world are used in the manufacture of perfumery, viz.: the violet, rose, orange flower, jasmine, tuberose, cassie, lavender, thyme, rosemary, geraniums, jonquil and fennel. The rose and the orange are the most valuable. Of the numerous varieties of the rose, only one is used, the Province rose, single, pale pink, the most sweet smelling of roses; not hardy.

Picking for perfumery occurs in almost every month of the year. It is a paradoxical fact in the business that the bitter orange yields the best blossoms for perfumery. One ton of blossoms yields two pounds eight ounces of oil neroli. The fruit of the bitter orange yields a very fine essential oil, bigarade. It is used in many scents. The orange tree, cultivated for its oil, lasts with care over 200 years.

One ton of the distilled leaves of the scented verbena geranium yields from 24 to 30 ounces of the essential oil. The flowers of the jasmine are picked just after sunset in July, and in the morning, as soon as the dew is off, in August. The jasmine is a peculiarly delicate flower. Its essential oil is so volatile that it cannot be extracted by distillation, the heated water decomposing it is so that only a faint tinge of the perfume is left in the water that passes through the refrigerant.

Like the jasmine, the oil of the tuberose cannot be extracted by distillation. The perfume of the cassie is much used in compounds. The process of manufacturing perfumes is in itself very interesting, especially to the ladies.

A ton of roses yields only two ounces of the attar. If kept at a temperature below 60°, attar crystalizes; if kept open to the air and light, it is easily volatized. Perfumed oils are made by putting fresh quantities of flowers into the finest of virgin olive oil from 20 to 30 different times. The essential oil of flowers has a strong affinity to lard or grease. The latter, rendered as white as snow, is perfectly saturated with the flowers. The process is repeated many times. In this way we have pomade of rose, orange, cassie and violet. The affinity of the perfume of flowers for alcohol is, however, stronger than than for grease. Pomades, immersed in alcohol, are rendered into extracts, the grease leaving the perfume. It is safe to say that, among the numerous articles of toilet, the manufacture of perfumed pomades, perfumed oils and high-priced perfumery generally is as a sealed book to many persons.

Roman Remains in London.

Modern London is built on the debris of the London of the times of Julius Cæsar and Agricola, and it is by no means infrequently that 1800-year old relics of the Roman town are found many feet below the surface of the existing streets. There was a rich find recently in the vicinity of Warwick Square at the depth of nineteen feet. The most interesting relic that came to light was hitherto unknown coin, of the the year 50, which lay alongside of about a dozen urns containing the products of cremation. Just think of the pangs which dying would have afflicted on those ancients if they had known that their ashes would have been seen and handled by an unknown race eighteen centuries and a half, nearly, after their demise! The most aristocratic urn was of glass and fifteen inches high. Well executed leaden pots inclosed several of these depositories, and roofing tiles the rest. The use of lead, as well as of tin, by the way, has great antiquity in Britain. Herodotus speaks of the production of tin there. Emblems of more or less significance touching the future state appeared on some of the receptacles. Along with the coin of the year 50 were others of dates between 40 and 300. But the Romans left something besides these useless things to be remembered by. They introduced into Great Britain its chestnut, walnut, peach, pear and cherry trees.

The Secret of Health.

Broken down invalids do you wish to gain flesh, to acquire an appetite, to enjoy a regular habit of body, to obtain refreshing sleep, to feel and know that every fiber and tissue of your system is being braced up and renovated. If so commence at once a course of Golden Seal Bitters. In one week you will be convalescent. In a month you will be well. Don't despair because you have a weak constitution. Fortify the body against disease by purifying all the fluids with Golden Seal Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, are rendered disease proof by this great invigorant. Ruinous bills for medical attendance may be avoided by counteracting the first symptoms of sickness with these Bitters. They are recommended from friend to friend, and the sale increases daily. We warrant a cure. They are a positive cure also for all female complaints. In these diseases they have no equal. Take no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

In the literary as well as the military world, the most powerful abilities will often be found concealed under a rustic garb.

If you feel nervous as to your kidneys, liver, or urinary organs, use Hunt's Remedy.

Many a man who had lost nerve, vigor and energy, has been cured by Hunt's Remedy.

Joshua Tuthill, Saginaw, Mich., had Bright's Disease, and was cured by Hunt's Remedy.

Vassar girls ate 692 pounds of candy last year. Sweets to the sweet. But alas! they ate also forty bushels of onions.

TECUMSEH, MICH., JULY [illegible] 1885.

DEATH OF GEN. U. S. GRANT.

[illegible] Grant's death. [illegible] Newberry, Saturday, [illegible] from a Detroit operator. A special telephone message from the Detroit Free Press to the Herald confirmed the foregoing, confirmed the report and stated that the patient breathed his last at four minutes past [illegible] this morning by eastern time. As we have been unable to gather any particulars up to the hour of going to press, although [illegible] have been anticipated, [illegible] was received with deep regret [illegible] sorrow [illegible] country. The bell on the flag was draped in morning and hung at half mast on the Chadney Building, where the news was first located. The L. O. O. H. [illegible] the battery and other public places were at once [illegible] and no morning exercises were held. Several private residences were [illegible] in a like manner. The G. A. R. posts were appropriately [illegible] and flung from their lodge [illegible]. During the noon hour the bells [illegible] church[illegible] were tolled. Many footfights of grief were generally [illegible] the greatest anxiety has been expressed to learn the particulars of his death.

Early in the month of April last the country was shocked with the intelligence that the old veteran had been stricken with a cancer and was fast [illegible] Only time to breathe his last. For several days his life seemed to be trembling in the balance, and the daily bulletins were watched with intense anxiety by all classes of people. By skillful attendance and [illegible] treatment he was carried through the crisis at that time and rallied sufficiently to be able to perform some clerical work upon his forthcoming autobiography. With the approach of warm weather however, the dread disease again obtained the mastery and he was conveyed from his home in N. Y. City to Mt. McGregor in the Adirondack region. Here the mountain breezes and bracing atmosphere revived him and gave him strength to battle with the dread monster a few days longer. On Monday last the news came that he was again failing. Yesterday it was announced that the end was not far away. And at eight o'clock this morning the grim old warrior who has faced the rebel hosts in battle without flinching, and never known defeat, surrendered to the dread messenger and crossed over the river from time into eternity.

It is unnecessary, at this time, to give a biographical sketch of General Grant's life. His military achievements during the war of the rebellion and his prominence in civil life since have made his name as familiar as a household word in the homes of all our people. Every boy and girl in the land who can read knows something of the life and career of America's greatest general. His boyhood life was of a humble character, and during his early manhood, while engaged in business as a private citizen at Galena, Illinois he displayed none of those characteristics which have since given him renown. But events have proven that he possessed military talents of the highest order, that he was born to shape an important epoch in the military history of his native land, and when that crisis came he sprang into the breach and carried the stars and stripes to victory. When the events in which he lived and moved shall have receded into the domain of history, and the portrait of his life shall have been dissected by the critical eye of the historian, [illegible]

TECUMSEH'S TEMPERANCE LECTURER

We each [illegible] John R. Clarke [illegible] is drawing to a close. He goes on Thursday [illegible] management of the Temperance Park Niagara Falls [illegible] week. Mr. John R. Clarke appeared for the second time before Ottawa people last evening in the Dominion Methodist Church, upon which occasion he delivered his popular lecture entitled "Builders, Big and Little." Upon the appearance of the lecturer he was introduced by the chairman, Rev. M. Longley, he was greeted with a perfect storm of applause. Mr. Clarke has been described by a contemporary as a marvel of eloquence and [illegible] so far his lecture last night was simply a masterpiece. For two hours he held his audience spellbound as he carried them through the gates of eloquence. At the close of the lecture he (Grant) paid a glowing tribute to the speaker and in an able manner moved a cordial resolution of thanks. The motion was seconded by Mr. Palmer and carried unanimously and Mr. Clarke responded in a very happy manner. Seldom, if ever, has such a lecturer visited the capital, and the announcement by Rev. Mr. Longley that it was just possible that Ottawa might be favored with a visit from Mr. Clarke in the course of a few months, was received with tumultuous applause.—Ottawa Citizen.

On Tuesday evening an exceedingly large lecture audience assembled at Bradburn's Opera House to listen for the second time in Peterborough, to John R. Clarke, the celebrated temperance orator. The chair was occupied by Geo. A. Cox, Esq., the Mayor, who briefly introduced the lecturer, who entered at once upon the treatment of his theme, "Among the Masses," and for two hours held his audience under the spell of his marvelous eloquence which many of his delighted auditors and good judges, did hold to be equal to that of John B. Gough in his palmiest days. In the course of his lecture he dealt with the blunders which occur amongst different persons in every walk of life. His treatment of the subject would, at one moment, have the audience convulsed with laughter, and at the next melted to tears. Enthusiastic applause greeted the climax of thrilling eloquence that frequently occurred. At the conclusion of the lecture a vote of thanks was moved in most complimentary terms by Rev. Mr. Gee, of Norwood, and Rev. Mr. Bradshaw, Rector of St. Luke's Ashburnham, and enthusiastically adopted.—Peterborough Examiner.

Miss Cleveland, the lady of the White House, has written an essay on the "Smiths." E. J. Smith, of the Adrian Record, an honored and only member of the Smith tribe, moralizes upon it thusly.

Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, the President's sister, has written an article against the Smiths. That settles it. There's an old maid that can't marry us. We had thought that a Rose by another name we might suggest, would smell a little sweeter, but now—we shall let her continue to sigh for the happiness which she has thrown away by an ill advised newspaper article. Rosie, old girl, good bye! You've wrecked your own prospects. And in the shriveled days to come, when calcimine and cologne fail to conceal the evidences of thy many summers, when sozodont is no longer salvation for old teeth, or sapolio for bad breath, and thou sittest in the autumn of thy maidenhood by the cheerless hearth, thy last "spark" gone out long ago, then, fair mocker of a numerous and powerful tribe, remember in thy lonliness and solitude, that article on the Smiths; be extremely wretched and reflect how different might have been thy lot but for that one fatal error.

Tired Languid Dull

Exactly expresses the condition of thousands of people at this season. The depressive effects of warm weather, and the week condition of the body can only be corrected by the use of a reliable tonic and blood purifier like Hood's Sarsaparilla. Why suffer longer when a remedy is so close at hand? Take Hood's Sarsaparilla now. It will give you untold wealth in health, strength and energy.

The big strike in the Saginaw Valley is in a fair way of settlement. The Pinkerton men returned home on Monday, and on Tuesday the militia companies from Flint, Port Huron and Alpena were relieved from further service. We gather these facts from the Saginaw Courier of Tuesday:

Mr. Barry said yesterday that the withdrawal of the Pinkerton men from the city met with favor on all sides, especially on the part of the strikers. He said last week he feared trouble, and at one time there was a crisis. "If one of the strikers had been hurt," said he, "you would have witnessed a scene horrible to contemplate, and I doubt if one of the Pinkertons would ever have seen Chicago again." Asked as to his opinion in regard to the length of time the strike would continue he said he thought everything would be amicably settled this week. He reaffirmed the statement that the strikers would not give in, and said he thought the concession would be on the part of the mill owners. He did not anticipate the result of the strike would leave any feeling of bitterness or antagonism between employer and employed, but believed it would end peaceably and satisfactorily on both sides.

THE American nation has a double birthright—liberty and land. Its liberty is has guarded jealously, but until very recent years it seems to have been indifferent to the loss of its landed estate and ignorant of the methods by which it has been diminished. A veteran legislator, the Hon. George W. Julian, who has given special attention to the acts disposing of our public lands, tells the story in brief in a contribution to the North American Review for August. In the same number five medical authorities discuss the question, "Can Cholera be Averted?" Felix L. Oswald contributes a suggestive article on "The Animal Soul," and the Rev. M. J. Savage, in "A Profane View of the Sanctum," brings an indictment against the daily press. The other articles are one on "The Price of Gas," by Charles H. Botsford, one on "Temperance Reform Statistics," by Prof. W. J. Beecher, and the chapter of "Comments," by various writers, on articles in previous numbers.

"Students' Songs."

Moses King, while a student at Harvard College earned his entire college expenses of about a thousand dollars a year by making books such as "Harvard and its Surroundings," "King's Handbook of Boston," "The Harvard Register," etc., and since graduation, a few years ago, he has published many successful books; among them "Students' Songs," which has had the most remarkable sale ever known for a book of its class. Over 40,000 copies of this "Students' Songs" have already been made, and the demand is said to be as active as ever. The probable cause of this success is the fact that prior to the publication of "Students' Songs" there was no book containing songs and music that have sprung up and become popular within college walls during the past ten years. The songs have been heard and heartily enjoyed by thousands of people at glee clubs, concerts, college festivities, college societies, in home circles and social gatherings. They have a peculiar breeziness and mirth-making capacity that make them enjoyable on all enjoyable occasions. The book itself is also a cause of its success. It is handsomely printed, and contains sixty songs, with their music, nearly all of which are copyrighted, and to be found in no other collection. It is a surprise to find so choice a collection of new and copyrighted jolly songs and music, selling for only fifty cents. Like almost all successes, it has its imitations, and some are rather deceptive in their make-up. Already several so-called collections of student or college songs are in the market, but the genuine and original book of "Students' Songs," the only one that has been note-worthily successful, is edited and compiled by Wm. H. Hills, a young Harvard graduate, and published by Moses King, at Harvard Square, in Cambridge, Mass.

Women are everywhere using and recommending Parker's Tonic because they have learned from experience that it speedily overcomes despondency, indigestion, pain or weakness in the back or kidneys, and other troubles peculiar to the sex.

local items are few and far between this week.

Remember the excursion to Devils Lake next Sunday.

There are several private telephone lines in operation at Blissfield.

A number of our young people visited Sand Lake on Tuesday and Wednesday.

The terrific wave of last Monday and Tuesday was felt throughout all the northern states.

A cane belonging to Thos. H. Mosher, of Springville, has been found and left at the HERALD office.

The germs of the weather is evidently generating into an offensive partisan. Turn the rascal out.

The two styles of ladies' hats most in vogue now are the bread bowl and the sugar loaf. They are just lovely, both of them.

Rudolph Heesen has returned home from Cleveland and will assist his father in the store and the express office at present.

Jones & Swick are getting settled down to business in their new harness store. Mr. Jones moved the express office last Monday.

Thos. H. Mosher, Esq., of Springville was in town yesterday on business and while here paid his respects at the HERALD office. He is getting his business affairs in shape as rapidly as possible.

A genuine old fashioned Ohio democratic red bandana handkerchief was found on the sidewalk in front of the HERALD office yesterday. It would be enough to make the "Old Roman" himself sneeze to look at it.

Adrian will have a street railway at an early day, the council having granted the right of way. The line will run from the Wabash depot to the College, with a branch down Tecumseh street to the Lake Shore Railway.

The Grand Ledge Independent editor rather gives himself away by stating that "During our absence from home last week no news of importance transpired and everything was quiet and orderly. The next morning after our arrival, however, a man hung himself."

Miss Hattie Bates has been visiting at Jackson for two weeks. She returned last Saturday, accompanied by her cousin Gracie Hobart, and in honor of her guest a little surprise party of girls was given at Mrs. L. L. Bates Saturday afternoon. Mrs. Spaulding sent a fine collection of flowers.

The Adrian Times says: A gentleman of this city, who has been a prominent candidate for a federal appointment, says that he has secured the position he was an applicant for, and is enjoying the salary attached to the place. No publication of his appointment has been made.

What is his name and what office does he hold? Be a little more explicit.

The big military event of the year in this section will be the grand encampment of the southeastern Michigan soldiers' and sailors' association at Devil's lake, August 26 7 and 8. The encampment will be held in Brazee's grove, about a half mile from the railway station, but all trains will be stopped at the camp ground. The ground is one of the loveliest spots in Michigan.

Adrian Times of Monday: The court house committee, which is in session to-day, has awarded the contract for the court house furniture to A. H. Andrews & Co., of Chicago, through D. P. Reamer, the representative of the Chicago people. The price for the furniture, complete, is $4893. In the Grand Rapids fire, mentioned in the state news of this issue, it will be noted a quantity of wood work for the Lenawee county court house was burned. The portion burned included the stairways and outside doors.

The County Pioneer Society will meet at Morenci next month.

Mr. Gibbs, of Ithaca, has taken a position as clerk in Bills' bank.

Extensive repairs are being made on the M. & O. bridge east of the village.

E. C. Williamson's son accidentally broke his arm below the elbow last week.

Regular communication of Tecumseh Lodge, F. & A. M. to-morrow evening.

The Clinton Local longs for a street sprinkler, and it is likely to long for some time.

Arch. Sherrard, Al. Stevens, Mat. Root and Jim Boyd spent Sunday at Sand Lake.

David Brooks, of Clinton, was in town Tuesday and favored the HERALD with a call.

Burt Temple has been on the sick list this week, but is now able to be around as usual.

Henry Burnett, of Cleveland, O., and his brother Robert, of Ypsilanti, are home for a few weeks.

Work is progressing this week on the addition to the Council building. John Cook is doing the brick work.

We received a call on Tuesday from I. J. Bradshaw, brakeman on the M. & O., who is taking a few days' respite from duty.

Henry Keyser has a fine new Portland cement sidewalk in front of his residence on Pottawatamie street. A great improvement.

Where is Wiggins? Wiggins has many sins to answer for but he never prophesied a cold summer in such a season as this. Give us a little more Wiggins, please.

Adrian Times: The Tecumseh band is trying to raise money for the purchase of new uniforms. The band has made excellent progress and deserves the necessary help to make the purchase.

The excursion train over the M. & O. last Sunday was composed of ten passenger coaches all nicely loaded.—About six hundred passengers were on board. Most of them were from Toledo.

George Boardman is running the Lancaster House and farm at Evans Lake. He is prepared to accommodate boarders who wish to rusticate at the lake, and to furnish parties with boats and fishing accommodations.

Charles H. Adam is having a good run of custom at the Sand Lake House this summer. He has extra accommodations for boating and fishing parties. People who wish a few days' recreation can find a nice, quiet home at his house.

Henry Caldwell was snatched for drunkenness last Saturday and convicted before Justice Burridge. Officer Hibbard conveyed him to Adrian on Monday and he will take board and lodging with Sheriff Whitmore for ten days.

W. D. Meeker and wife, of Chicago, arrived in town Monday and will remain here this week shaking hands with their many Tecumseh friends.—"Will" will have plenty to do to keep him busy for six days. He still holds his position in the offices of the North Chicago street railway company.

Our exchanges of last week come to us well laden with accounts of the big press excursion. Among a large number of articles descriptive of the trip, that have come to our notice, one of the very best is that in the Hudson Gazette. Bro. Schermerhorn is as skillful with the pencil as he is courteous in looking after the welfare of the ladies.

Morenci Observer: A fellow from near Canandaigua hired a Morenci livery rig and drove it on Saturday to Wauseon, where his patriotism assumed the form of a big drunk. He lost all knowledge as to the whereabouts of the rig and walked back home. The livery man had the trouble of going in search of the horse and vehicle and found them turned loose on the fair grounds.

There is some pith and point to this squib now going the rounds of the press. "Never go where you are not wanted. To do so is to be impolite. If a man wants you to dine with him, or visit his home, he will invite you to do so, and if a merchant cares to see you in his place of business he will invite you through the columns of your local paper. It is wrong to intrude upon privacy, or thrust yourself upon a man who has not sufficient desire for your trade to ask for your business. Don't do it."

Supervisor Love, of Franklin, is enjoying very poor health at present.

Whortleberries have appeared in the market and they are of prime quality.

If you want a good days recreation, take in the Excursion to Devils lake next Sunday.

John Smyth, ex Deputy Sheriff, returned to his home in Grand Rapids last Saturday.

Mont. Hendershott, of the News force, spent last Sunday with his Brooklyn friends.

The revised version is hardly adequate to describe the intense heat of the past few days.

Miss Libbie Robinson, the clerk in the post-office, has gone to Vineland, New Jersey, to spend her two weeks' vacation.

It is estimated that Miss Rose Cleveland will make at least $50,000 out of her book. She has refused an offer of $30,000 for the copyright.

C. H. Adam will give a grand concert and promenade at the Sand Lake House on the evening of August 1st. Music by Hunt's full orchestra.

The Adrian Fourth of July committee after paying all bills had a surplus on hand of $230.40, which sum was turned over to the Light Guard.

Geo. A. Kies and C. T. Cummins spent most of last week rusticating at Sand Lake. We have been unable to learn how many fish they caught.

John Davenport, who formerly owned the Hotel at Evan's Lake has been spending a few days very pleasantly with his old acquaintances in Franklin and Tecumseh.

The officers and members of the Baptist Ladies' Social are requested to meet at the residence of Mrs. O. B. DeWolf, on Saturday afternoon, July 25th, at 2:30, for the transaction of important business.

We are in receipt of the current catalogue of Albion College. That institution is now in a prosperous condition. Among the second year students we find the name of William F. Harding, of Tecumseh.

John J. Adam has a work in two volumes entitled Harper's Pictorial History of the Great Rebellion. It is the best history of the war we have seen, and we are indebted to Mr. Adam for the privilege of examining it.

Mr. W. S. Cairnes and wife, of Turrell, Texas, are visiting relatives here. It is their first visit to Tecumseh in 27 years and he says Tecumseh looks quite natural except the trees and young people. They will start for home on Tuesday next.

The Wide-Awake missionary band of the Presbyterian church will give an entertainment at the lecture room of the church next week on Thursday evening. Doors open at 7 o'clock.—Ice cream and cake will be served. All are invited to attend.

We met Rafe VanVleet on the M. & O. train last Saturday and had a pleasant chat with him. He is now located at Battle Creek and is doing finely. B. L. & W. F. Baxter have their office in the same building and Rafe says they are working up a good business also.

We have received a copy of the Greeley, Col., Tribune which contains a lengthy poem, read at the Union Colony celebration, July 4th by Capt. David Boyd. Although the Captain is now a man engrossed with family and business cares he yet finds time to cultivate the muses.

Albert and Chas. Brewer arrived home last Saturday noon via the M. & O. road. Charley is in a very feeble condition and was brought home upon a couch, but it is hoped he may improve, after recovering from the fatigue of the journey. If the good wishes and prayers of his friends could restore him, he would speedily regain his health. He has the best of care and nursing however, and we can only await the issue calmly.

The farmers' big picnic at Devils Lake will be held this year on the 20th of August, and it is quite probable that Allen's grove near the north end of the lake will be selected as the place, if the preferences of people generally are respected. It would be a great convenience to people in this section of the county and in northern Hillsdale who may wish to attend, in fact to all who would go by rail, and it would be no detriment to those who would go by private conveyance. Arrangements can undoubtedly be made with the M. & O. to run special trains on that day.

Mr. F. D. Anable, Auditor of the M. & O. R. R., was in town Monday with a supply of tickets for the city office which has been placed with A. E. Kennedy. Mr. Kennedy has now on hand a full supply of tickets to all important points on the M. & O. and connecting roads, and which will be sold at the same rates as at the depot offices of the road. As the city office is in a convenient location and the agent is a courteous and accommodating gentleman, we look to see a liberal increase of passenger traffic from this locality over the M. & O. This enterprise on the part of the company should be reciprocated by the citizens of Tecumseh.

Will Lehr of Manchester, is in town.

Miss May Blood, of Lansing, is visiting friends in town.

Fred H. Burlingame returned to Kalamazoo on Friday last.

The Tecumseh senior base ball team is getting quite a reputation abroad.

Grasshoppers are attacking the out fields in some sections of the country.

Some thermometers in this village marked over 100 degrees above zero last Tuesday afternoon.

Rev. Clement Lester, of Tecumseh, preached at the Baptist church in Morenci last week Sunday.

In cleaning his horse last Friday, D. C. Earned received a friendly nip on his upper lip, which has caused him much pain since.

C. K. Spafford has sold the Clinton Local newspaper to Geo. H. Miles. We regret to lose Bro. Spafford from the fraternity, but welcome his successor to the ranks of the elect. May he live long and prosper.

The summer session of the Normal School of Adrian College opened Monday with a large attendance. Students may enter next week or any time during the session. The text books used may be had at the college at a small rental. Board and lodging can be secured at the college for $3 a week.

The Panorama of the Battle of Gettysburg, on exhibition in Chicago, is considered by everybody the greatest attraction of the Garden City. It is visited daily by hundreds of people, and everybody says it is the greatest exhibition they ever saw. We can only say that nobody should fail to visit it while in Chicago.

One of our old and highly honorable married citizens is reported to be terribly smitten with the charms of a west side young lady. He ought to be old enough to know better.—Blissfield Advance.—Aisy there, aisy!—Give the old man a chance. "He ought to be old enough to know better" and he will be if you don't wear him out by harrassing him over the matter.—Evening Record.

W. W. Van Antwerp, publisher of the Jackson Patriot, has been appointed post master of that city by President Cleveland. Mr. Van Antwerp is a popular citizen, was a soldier in the Union army in which he rose to the rank of major, and will undoubtedly make a good post master. He has many friends throughout the State who will be gratified to learn of his appointment.

The locating committee of the Lenawee, Hillsdale, Washtenaw and Monroe G. A. R. association have fixed upon Brazee's grove at Devils lake as the place of holding the grand encampment this year. The time has not yet been definitely determined, but it will either be the last week in August or the first week in September. It is expected that Commissioner of pensions, Gen. Black and Gen. John A. Logan will be present.

The Tecumseh Cornet Band has received an invitation to be present at the 25th anniversary of the Monroe Cornet Band, which will be celebrated in that city August 20th. The band Boys express their intention of accepting the invitation and attend, and to that end are making an effort to secure their new uniforms in time to wear them on that occasion. Our citizens should see that the boys are not behind the rest of the bands in the matter of a good appearance, as they surely will not be in their playing.

Bro. Samson, of the Blissfield Advance, thus relates a little of his personal experience on the press excursion:

"At Reed City we forgot to look after our carpet-sack until the baggage-man of the F. and P. M. had left for home. As he would not return that night, and it was important that we have our baggage we related our trouble to the hotel clerk. That gentleman could give us no information—didn't know the baggage man, didn't know where he lived, and hadn't any idea how the baggage could be obtained before morning. We studied the situation a moment, then laying down a half dollar with the baggage-check, remarked: "I want that satchel." Without a word he left the hotel and it was not two minutes before the "grip" was deposited in our room. "Money talks."

DEATH OF "OLD REB."

Another old war horse has gone the way of all flesh. Lieut. Elliott Gray's celebrated war horse "Old Reb" died on the 1st of July at the age of 27 years. He was captured in Virginia on the 11th day of May, 1863, and from that date until the close of the war he was Lieut. Gray's property. Old Reb was in 23 engagements and was three times wounded. He was at Gettysburg, on Kilpatrick's raid, on Grant's campaign through the Wilderness, and in the principal engagements in the Shenandoah Valley. He was given a respectful burial on Lieut. Gray's farm near this village, by the side of "Don Juan," the celebrated charger, which ran away with Gen. Custer during the review in Washington at the close of the war. Lieut. Gray served on Gen. Custer's staff during the war and Don Juan was in Gray's keeping when he died. The bones of these two old war horses will sleep side by side.

NOTES FROM NEW YORK.

NAPLES, N. Y., July 19, 1885.

EDITOR HERALD:

Since I wrote you while at Niagara Falls, the N. P. A. convention has opened and closed at Buffalo. The convention was, to have been held in the Grand Music Hall, but when that building was burned the mammoth Arsenal was secured. The Arsenal is said to be the largest building in America, covered by a truss roof unsupported by pillars. The exhibition of photographs in all departments of the art was very fine. Four collections from Germany contained some of the finest photographs I ever saw. J. T. Ryder of Cleveland was awarded the Gentile gold medal for the best collection by an American artist. The exhibition by the stock dealers was good, and I saw many new, useful and novel things, and improvements in machinery. The lectures and discussions were very interesting and instructive.

On the afternoon of Wednesday the 15th, the convention adjourned and the sun workers proceeded to Niagara to attend the opening of the falls property as a State Park. The village was thronged all day, and I heard several estimate the number of people there at fifty thousand or more. It seemed to me that there were more than that on Goat Island alone. Such a rush and crush! More than the people of Niagara Falls could possibly feed and entertain. The fancy prices charged for eatables were high. Twenty five cents for a glass of church lemonade; thirty five cents for a ham sandwich, and other things accordingly.

I met but one person at the falls that I knew, and that was Brock, the Italian boy, who lately worked for J. S. Kinney. Niagara Falls village was profusely decorated for the momentous occasion. Flags and bunting nearly covered every building. Over one of the streets was a large triple arch. On one side of the arch was the inscription "New York's finest gift to the World," on the other side "Niagara Redeemed, Free to the World." Under the arch the great procession of militia and state dignitaries passed. Mr. and Mrs. M. P. Brown and I kept together as much as we could, but a moments stop at any time would separate us; we had hard work to keep near each other. Three hours at the falls in such a mob was all we could stand and then we joined the vast throng of people eager to catch the first train to Buffalo.

On Friday morning I took the early train for Canandaigua where I arrived about noon. I had to wait until five o'clock before I could board the boat for the head of Canandaigua Lake and thence to Naples. I made the most of the time by wandering around Canandaigua. This beautiful village is at present as quiet and dull as a country four corners. There did not seem to be anything going on; in fact I had hard work to realize that it was not a very quiet Sunday. At five o'clock I was seated on the upper deck of the steamer Ontario, bound for Naples. Lake Canandaigua is about sixteen miles long, and about a mile wide nearly the whole length. It is bounded on both sides by lofty hills and the views in every direction are very fine. I saw by my ticket that there were forty landings along the lake, and the steamer stopped at many of them, crossing and recrossing the lake several times. The shore of this lake has become very popular as a summer resort, and there are some beautiful cottages and finely laid out grounds along it. Several of the cottages are of novel and beautiful design, and must have cost small fortunes. We landed in Woodville at the head of the lake, at about half past seven, when I met the party who took me to my uncle's farm near Naples, on the west side of the Valley. Naples Valley is one of the prettiest spots I ever saw. It is a level plateau about four miles long and a mile wide, surrounded on three sides by great hills, that I have often seen tipped by clouds. The views from the hills are beautiful, looking in any direction. The great industry is the cultivation of grapes, and wherever we look we see row upon row of vines terraced up the hills, the vineyards separated by the great gullies cutting down the sides every few rods. There are several glens around the valley. One of the most noted ones, the Parish Glen, affording a whole day's sight seeing. There have been some artists and their pupils here all summer, sketching and painting the beauties of Naples Valley and the glens. There are at present fourteen artists studying and sketching here. Naples Village is a pretty little place at the upper end of the valley. It has one live paper, the "Neapolitan Record" published by a live man, S. L. Deyo, a relative of the Deyos of Jackson. I shall do the work I came here to do—on Monday, take some views around the valley, and on Tuesday start back for Tecumseh.

TWO HOURS AT ONSTED.

Last Saturday we paid the village of Onsted a call, stopping about two hours between trains, and we were quite surprised to witness the growth of the village. There are several stores already in operation and another store is now in course of erection, Mr. D. A. Spencer now being engaged in laying the foundation walls therefor.

Wilson Lee, who opened a boot and shoe store there last fall, has recently added a stock of groceries and drugs and is fast building up a fine business.

C. E. Mars still runs the village blacksmith shop and seems to have his hands full. He has a healthy arm and turns out first class work.

Mr. Hine runs the pioneer store and also has the post office in his building.

Charles & Marsteller have recently opened a hardware store, which is well stocked with goods in their line, and they confidently expect a good trade.

Dr. G. W. Ross, formerly of Rome Center, came to Onsted last fall and hung out his shingle. He has a fine office fitted up north of the railroad, and has already established a good trade. His practice thus far has more than met his expectations.

Among the old acquaintances whom we found there was W. B. Knapp, formerly of Tecumseh. He is now living in the village, working at his trade and enjoying life.

Also J. O. Maxwell, who has been supervisor of Cambridge. He lives on the old farm west of Onsted, and is running it to advantage. He knows how to make farming pay.

OBITUARY.

We clip the notice below from the Reading, Pa., Free Press of the 16th inst. The deceased lived here until her marriage, and no young lady has gone from among us in recent years with heartier good wishes for her temporal welfare. This sad dispensation will be mourned by scores of her old friends here in Tecumseh who knew the deceased in her life time and their hearts will beat in sympathy for the afflicted husband and children:

On the 8th inst., in this place, Mrs. Nellie Juliet, wife of Mr. Wm. H. Ramsey and only daughter of Mr. P. C. and Mrs. H. M. Temple, departed this life. She was born Dec. 6, 1856, in Tecumseh, Michigan.

Mrs. Ramsey was at the time of her death a member of the Baptist church in her native town where she resided most of her unmarried life and was well known to many. She will be sincerely mourned there not only by her father and mother and four brothers, but a large circle of relatives and friends. Here too her loss is deeply felt and the sympathy of the whole goes out to the bereaved husband and four little motherless children.

The funeral at the residence was largely attended and the floral tributes were very beautiful, indicating the high estimate in which she was held and the deep sorrow felt for her loss.

A GROTESQUE DUEL.

How Colonel Skerrett Proved Himself to Be a Brave Man.

Colonel Skerrett, Major Marsh and [illegible] were at the Hotel Angleterre, Paris. They were American [illegible] in their travels, all three [illegible] looking Dandies, who had given unfortunate offence to the [illegible] Dr. Vicaire, surgeon in the [illegible] was standing in front of them regarding them with a severe air.

"[illegible] to you as you [illegible] Major Lieutenant [illegible] satisfaction," said Dr. Vicaire, particularly addressing Colonel Skerrett. "You have a [illegible] You were [illegible] very good [illegible] apology, you choose [illegible] Pardonez—ze."

"Weapons," said Major Marsh, coming to his assistance. Dr. Vicaire [illegible]

"Apologize for kicking his damned dog," [illegible] the Colonel. "What [illegible] snapping and barking at me [illegible] I would kick Mr. Foulon himself if he did it."

"Ah!" [illegible] the doctor, "very good! Insult additional!" and he blew his nose as a flourish of trumpets.

Colonel Skerrett was as brave a man as ever stood in boots, but besides his conscientious objections to a duel, the code of marbleed was so ridiculous that he only answered with a burst of laughter.

"Ah!" said the Doctor calmly, but reddening. "Insult three." And he took a prodigious pinch of snuff.

The three friends looked at each other. Major Marsh took the word.

"My friend will allow me to act for him. We have the choice of weapons?"

"Yes."

"Then I choose them that nature provided, fists."

"Fists!" said the doctor, pondering. "You mean ze-ze—"

Major Marsh explained in pantomime.

"Sir!" cried the fiery doctor, "you make ze game of me! I see you after this friend have ze satisfaction."

"Don't get so hot, now. What do you say to mutiled club in a darkened room?"

It took a long time to make the doctor understand this proposition, but when he did he rejected it with constantly increasing wrath. Captain Pickering suggested a rough-and-tumble in a pit—kick, scratch, bite, claw and gouge. Major Marsh thought an excellent way of settling the difficulty would be for the two adversaries to go into shallow water and see which could drown the other. Finally, Colonel Skerrett suggested that they should bring a keg of powder on the field; cast lots; and whichever lost should sit upon the keg and apply the cigar he had just been smoking to a hole in the keg. Dr. Vicaire tore his hair and rejected one and all.

"Why," said the Major, "it 'pears to me that we haven't got the choice of weapons at all."

"Of ze weapon, yes! But zis is no weapon. Swords, dagger, peestol, gun—zes all weapon. But ze gouge, ze feest, ze clup rempli, or vit vos call ze steff clupsteh, monsieur!" and the worthy Doctor stamped with rage.

"Doctor," said the Major, quietly, "the last suggestion of Colonel Skerrett's is one that has been acted on, in at least one case in one of the Southern States of America. If your friend wants an out-and-out duel, he will accept the offer of a barrel of powder under them conditions. If he don't he is only foolin' with the matter. People blaze away at each other here for half an hour and shoot nothing but the pigeons. When we do a thing in the States we do it."

"Sir!" shrieked Vicaire, with concentrated rage. "You coward, you poltroon, secrat! I post you in ze cafe, ze hotel. I and my friend whip you with ze—eh!—ze whip of ze horse!" and he rushed from the room, swinging his hat frantically in one hand and plucking at his hair with the other.

Left to themselves, the three friends laughed heartily. As for the doctor's threat of personal chastisement, Major Marsh alone looked strong enough to horsewhip the National Guard if it were called out. For the posting in the cafes they cared exactly nothing. They chatted and smoked and were beginning to forget the whole affair.

But an hour later the writer announced: "M. le Lieutenant Foulon!"

M. Foulon advanced into the room, bowed courteously to the two, and addressing Colonel Skerrett, said in perfect English:

"I have just seen my friend Vicaire. Possibly he misunderstood. From what he told me, I understand that you made propositions which no gentleman would make. Therefore you are no gentleman. It remains to be seen if you are a coward as well. I am aware that your last proposition is a mode of the duello practiced in some parts of your country. Of that my friend Vicaire was ignorant. Although the practice is irregular, I waive that consideration, and personally accept your proposal of a keg of powder under the specified conditions. You will oblige me by naming time and place."

"Say to-morrow at five o'clock in the afternoon. I reckon the little wood of Plessis, on the road to Versailles, is a quiet enough place. I will supply the keg of powder for your use, and you will supply the cigar for mine."

"Very well, sir," said Foulon bowing. "I shall be there. The terms to be rigidly adhered to. To apply the cigar which one has just been smoking to the open hole in the keg."

"Precisely," answered the Colonel.

"I presume," said the Lieutenant with a hesitating air, "that in an event the services of a doctor or surgeon will be unnecessary."

"I am sure of it," said the Colonel, with a grin.

Foulon left the room, and when he had gone Colonel Skerrett said: "I'll fight this here devil, but I aint gwine to let that there fool blow himself to atoms." The three friends took measures accordingly.

The next day, at the appointed time, the five men, all smoking vigorously, were on the ground. Each party had brought its powder-keg along. The Major and Dr. Vicaire tossed up. The Major won.

Foulon turned ghastly pale, but walked firmly to the keg which the Americans had brought and sat down on it. It was an ordinary cider keg, and Major Marsh knocked out the bung. All then retired to a safe distance except the Colonel, who remained standing by Foulon's side. The latter, down whose livid face the sweat was rolling, took his cigar from his mouth and advanced it, still glowing, toward the open bung-hole.

"Hold on there," said the Colonel, "that ere cigar is lit."

"Certainly it is," gasped Foulon, his lips quivering in spite of himself.

"Well," said the Colonel, with a grin, "you don't such a darned fool as to put a lighted cigar into a keg of powder, do you? When was you born?"

"Sir," replied the Lieutenant, vainly endeavoring to hold the cigar motionless in his shaking hand, "I have given my word that if I lost the toss-up I should put this lit cigar——"

"Hold on! you didn't say it."

"Well, the cigar I was smoking."

"Put it out then."

"Sir, you have run the risk that I ran. I have lost, and I but do as you would have done. I will put this lighted cigar into this bung-hole——"

"Put in the chawed-up end, then."

"You insult me again, sir!"

"Bless your heart. You fire up a darned sight easier than this ere powder ever will. Do you think that I would ever put the burning end of a cigar into the bung-hole of a keg full of powder? Great Jerusalem!"

"I have told you again, and I repeat it, that you are no gentleman. But I—I am a man of honor. Bah! You shall see me die as one. I keep my promise."

Foulon slowly advanced the burning cigar toward the opening in the keg beneath.

"Go away here, you shall be killed!" shouted Vicaire to the Colonel; but the latter remained quietly beside the victim. Vicaire covered his face with his hands, and waited for the awful moment which was to blow his friend to atoms. There was a dead silence, and then a slight hiss was heard. Vicaire looked up. Foulon, his face purple with rage, was holding his cigar, after repeatedly poking it into the bung-hole. The Colonel was on a broad grin.

"Is this powder?" asked Foulon.

"Tooth powder," answered the Colonel: "cost almighty."

"But," said Foulon, shaking now with rage instead of fear, "if you had lost the toss-up our keg was full of gunpowder. What then?"

"I'd have put the cigar out before I put in," said the Colonel.

"Ah!" murmured Foulon.

"Or stuck in the chawed-up end. Hold on to the terms, you."

Foulon calmly walked to his carriage. He and Vicaire hoisted in their keg of gunpowder and followed it themselves.

"Sir!" shouted Foulon to the Colonel, "I said you were no gentleman. I say now you are a coward."

The Colonel smiled.

For three days the friends walked about Paris and saw both Foulon and Vicaire several times. They were not posted in the cafes, for the Frenchmen feared the storm of ridicule which a knowledge of the grotesque duel would bring upon them. Neither were they horsewhipped, for Vicaire argued that they would probably retaliate, and in such a case the whipping would be only a modified form of the duel a la club rempli.

On the fourth day after this "duel" the three friends happened to be on one of the large and beautiful steamboats carrying excursions down the Seine. Colonel Skerrett, like a consistent Yankee, was in the pilot-house, watching the working of the wheel. He came down afterward and sauntered back to where his two friends were standing. Near them were no less individuals than Foulon and Vicaire. Neither party addressed the other. The boat was in the middle of the river. For a long distance on either side the banks were straight, and the tide was flowing directly down the middle channel. Suddenly arose a cry of fire. A wild stampede of passengers in the bow of the boat was made toward the stern, and Foulon, who was standing near an opening in the railing, was thrown from his balance. As he was falling overboard the Colonel stretched out his long arm, grasped him by the collar, and pulled him in again. The Frenchman's hat had fallen off. The Colonel picked it up, and with a friendly smile handed it to his late adversary. Foulon colored up and said eagerly:

"Colonel Skerrett, I beg your pardon. You are a gentleman."

In the meantime the panic increased. All the bow of the boat was in a bright blaze, and the fire reached the pilot-house. The pilot rushed out with singed beard and eyebrows, and the boat slowly drifted down the stream. The Colonel caught hold of the pilot and dragged him to Foulon.

"Sir," said he, "ask this here fellow which bank is the safest to land on, and tell me."

"He says the right one," answered Foulon. "But the boat can not be managed. The wheel must be on fire."

Without a word of reply the Colonel plowed his way through the shrieking crowd, leaped up the steps of the pilot-house and seized the wheel. There he stood, the flames roaring about him, the crowd shrieking beneath him, steadily steering toward the right bank. Foulon shuddered at this exhibition of simple superhuman courage. The bank was reached. The crowd, selfish and crazed with fear, rushed to land. The Major and the Captain struggled up the burning steps of the pilot-house, followed by Foulon and Vicaire. They dragged the Colonel out through the flames, bore him to the bank, and applied restoratives. He was less injured than might have been supposed, and at length opened his eyes.

"Oh, Colonel Skerrett!" cried Foulon, with tears in his eyes, "your pardon, your pardon! You are a brave man and a man of honor."

"The Colonel," said Captain Pickering, "can swim like an otter. He could have crossed the creek a hundred times without stopping."

"Fists," said Major Marsh, "are no weapons, perhaps. Well, pistols are. The Colonel can knock the center of a five-cent piece spun in the air at fifty yards."

"I will never fight a duel again," murmured Foulon.

"And I never call one man ze coward for not fight of ze duel," said Vicaire.

"Is all the women safe?" asked the Colonel.—F. B. Ivers, in Chicago Interocean.

THE SABBATH SERVICE.

A Fancy Sketch Just as Appropriate Elsewhere as in Boston.

What a blessed privilege is ours, one day in seven, to lay aside our cares and our troubles, and to rest our weary minds and our tired bodies in contemplation of the ideal perfection at which we all of us aim! Here is a congregation just emerging from the sanctuary.

"Thank the Lord, we've got out where we can breathe!" exclaims Mrs. Phleshpatt, who is a lady of countiful proportions. "Thank the Lord, we've got out where we can breathe! I really thought I should suffocate. It was insufferably stuffy. Wonder why the sexton thinks last year's atmosphere so much superior to the present season's vintage? If I were a boy, really, I believe I'd break two or three windows. I'd do something, at any rate, to let that poor imprisoned air out and a little fresh air in."

"And I was so sleepy!" was the volunteer observation of Mrs. Morfeus; "I couldn't keep my eyes open, for all I could do. Don't you think Mr. Prooftext is getting fearfully dull?"

"Awful!" Thus Mrs. Phleshpatt. "Did you see what a horrid bonnet Sarah Somes had on?" asked Mary Maize.

"A perfect fright, wasn't it?" was the questionable form in which Jennie Jones expressed her opinion.

"Made over?"

"I should hope so."

"So should I. I should hate to think any milliner guilty of such taste."

"Mamma," said a little miss, tugging at her mother's dress, "Johnny was pinching me all meeting time."

"Why, Johnny! how could you?"

"Well, what's a feller goin' to do, sittin' there doin' nothin' for more'n an hour? Besides, Lil begun it."

"I didn't."

"I say you did. Didn't you pull my hair?"

"I only pulled it easy."

"My gracious! You call that easy?"

"Baby!"

"Children! What an awfully long prayer Mr. Prooftext made. I thought he would never get through."

"I know it," replied Mrs. Smith, to whom the last remark was made; "he seems to be getting worse and worse. By the way, did you notice old Gerrion and Liza Periwinkle?"

"Not see them! I guess I did! I couldn't keep my eyes off 'em. Awfully sweet on each other, ain't they?"

"And his wife's only been dead six months!"

"Disgraceful, ain't it? When are you coming up to see me?"

"Oh, I don't know. I've got so much to do, you know, I don't get any time to go anywhere. Why, there's Mrs. Chatterton over there. I suppose I shall have to speak to her."

"I hope to goodness she won't see me, the hateful thing!"

"Guess you think as much of her as I do; but if I don't speak to her I'll never hear the last of it. Good-by; come and see me when you can."

"I say, Charley," asked Tom, "who was that girl you were mashing all church time?"

"Oh, that was a little creature I met at the dance last winter. She's a daisy, h?"

"Not bad. But how'd the game come out yesterday afternoon?"

"As usual. Bostons got goose-egged. Have a cigarette?"

"Well!" exclaimed Clara, "what do you think of the new tenor? I think he's just splendid! What a heavenly mustache!"

"And what a fool that Miss Sprigggins made of herself! She was gawking at him all the time they were singing, instead of looking at her notes. However, I don't suppose she can sing much worse than when she does try to follow the music. Wonder what they keep her in the choir for?"

"Sure enough! Or Mr. Bassclefft, either. Why, he's actually getting bald. And mercy! how he squints!"

"Hullo! There's that Cheever fellow."

"What, that ninny who's all the time staring at the girls? H'm, I don't want to see him. I'll turn down here; good-by."

"Guess she needn't worry about his staring at her," soliloquizes Nell, as her dear friend disappears around the corner. "Old jealousy!"

And so it goes. Really, what a set of empty-headed, venomous creatures we should be were it not for the Sabbath service!—Boston Transcript.

AN INCIDENT OF TRAVEL.

Bill Nye Has a Vision Which the Morning Dissipates.

Night before last, after I had registered at the hotel, and had been assigned "the last room in the house"—I use the language of the hotel clerk—I went into the dining-room to tea.

After I had regained my confidence among strangers, and curled myself up in as abject a manner as possible in the presence of the head waiter, I began to look around for an opportunity to beam on some unprotected woman with my sunny smile. It is not my custom while traveling to smile on one in whose heart a hope might spring up to be dashed to earth by my departure. If I have caused pain in that way I did not intend to do so. I can joke and carry on and have a real good time, but I do not wish to inspire any breast a hope which may be blasted, ah, alas! too soon.

It was not long before I discovered a beautiful blonde of the female sex at the farther end of the room beneath the chandelier. Her skin seemed to be of a delicate sea-shell color, and her hair was corn-colored. Her clothes also were entirely new, I should judge, and made especially for her. On her finger she wore a diamond ring with perfect ease. She knew just how to work that finger in order to get the most possible glitter out of her diamond. Every little while I would look over there and revel in her beauty, and I thought that she was not entirely insensible to my charms. Still, she looked at me in a kind of a half reproachful manner, which gave me the idea that I did not know whether it was intentional or not.

All that evening she was in my mind. I dreamed that night that I swooped down upon her and carried her away to the remotest boundaries of the world in a special car. The next morning I awoke hungry, for I didn't eat much supper the evening before. I went down to breakfast, waiting and fooling away my time, hoping that she would come while I was in the breakfast room, and I would fill myself up with the beautiful vision and a cup of coffee.

Anon she came. She sailed into the room with cold disdain, and an air of hauteur, and such things as that. The head waiter waved his hand like a self-acting duke in a theater, and gave her a seat at my table. A thrill passed up through my graceful and delicately-molded spinal column, and I laid down the vulgar sausage with which I was about to feed myself when she dawned upon me.

I ventured to look across the table at her in the full glare of the new-born day. (Stereoscopic views of this last sentence will be forwarded to any address at $1 per glare.) The first thing that I discovered was that she hadn't put her yellow wig on straight. It was a little higher on one ear than the other, which gave her the air of a young man who had over-monkeyed with the flowing bowl. This showed to the casual spectator a glimpse of her own moth-eaten sage-brush hair peeping out like the faded tail on an old buffalo robe.

Then I knew we could never be more to each other than friends. Her nose was red also and she had not been properly calcimined. In the hurry of dressing she had missed her nose with the powder-rag, and that organ—meaning, of course, the nose, not the powder-rag—loomed up robust and purple in the ghastly waste of cheek-bones and other osseous formations.

Ah, what a pain it gave me to see my beautiful vision fade thus before my eyes! Then I thought how I had smiled upon her the evening before, and how, perhaps, a new hope had sprung up in her heart, and I feared that when she knew it was all over between us the shock, at her time of life, might kill her.

I left my hot pancakes, with the maple sirup all over them, and fled. Out into the din, the hurry and the tireless rush of the mad, mad world, trying to stifle the memory of that broken heart. Should she see these lines, I hope she will not think bitterly of me. I still admire her as a well-preserved ruin, but love in such a case would be a hollow mockery.—Bill Nye, in Springfield Journal.

THE MIND CURE.

Expansion Into a Medical Practice of the Power the Mind Has Over the Body.

It has always been known that the mind can exert a good or bad influence over the body. The old mental philosophies were full of stories which had a tendency to show how persons had taken to bed after having been told, by a succession of acquaintances, about the dreadful paleness of face or of a most unhealthy express on of the eyes. It was also affirmed, in the olden newspapers, that some mischievous wife made her husband believe that he was swelling up with dropsy, and should by all means hasten to the German Springs, and should take her along as nurse, his condition being so critical. The wife thus secured a trip to Europe—her art being that of taking pieces out of her husband's vests, so that it became almost impossible for him to make them reach around his abnormal body.

The Metaphysical Cure is, therefore, not a discovery, but the expansion into a medical practice of a power which had once been little else than a curiosity. A tendency of our age is to utilize forces. Nothing so pains the American mind as the thought of having anything go to waste. We are now in a worry lest there may be an electric potency that might turn all our wheels; we are attempting to run engines by sunbeams; the waste of water-power at Niagara is the grief of many; while those who have escaped forms of distress are made unhappy because the air is not as full of balloons as the streets are of cars and wagons.

In such a day it was very naturally concluded that if mind has a power over health and disease, let us utilize this power. Let us not permit the force to escape all duty, like the waters of Niagara. Let us not permit merely artful women to use it as a means of inducing dropsy and a foreign trip. Let us domesticate this mental influence, and extract from it valuable service.

Thus came the "Metaphysical Cure" about eight or ten years ago. In the hands of extremists it is made partly one of the delusions of the world, but in the hands of the wise and moderate it is a tonic of great value, and will displace a large amount of quinine and wild cherry bitters. Its philosophy may all be summed up in the fact that the soul affects the body and can rouse up its torpid blood, can make the liver, heart, lungs and the brain—that nerve center—quicken their pace, and use up or crowd out the diseased globules from the blood and fluids. Clara Morris has perhaps saved her life by acting upon the stage just enough to enable her mind to reconstruct, from time to time, her delicate physique. One of the old poets said: "The soul doth the body make"—it being a well-known fact that the educated and powerful mind makes the face into its own likeness.

This is, then, the philosophy of the mind cure. It can do much for man, and is not to be approached because it can not do every thing. If the influence of the mind may benefit one sick person in twenty-five, it will then surpass in value many popular medicines; and if it shall prevent many others from falling into imaginary illness, it will confer a second benefit upon the community. Man is not in a condition to reject the help of any of Nature's kind offers. By means of all these discovered helps the evils of ill-health may be mitigated if not banished from the world. Will, energy, medicine, fasting, good air, good food, good water, are all friends of health, but no one of these is master of the entire field of ailment. He will act most wisely who employs all these causes at different times of need.

The instances in which the body is languishing under only a feeble will-power are very many. A delicately-organized lady of Chicago lay sick a few weeks with lung fever, and became so accustomed to feebleness that at last she had to be told very plainly by her physician that she was well and that she must rise, dress and go down to the supper table. She has lived to laugh over the absurdity of spending perhaps two weeks in bed after she had fully recovered.

A citizen of Chicago who had been in his bedroom for a few weeks, and no thought of going out to business for a week or more was cured by a conflagration in a neighbor's house. He went out to help save life and property, and became so fully aroused that his bedroom lost its charm. He dressed with his family and resumed business next day, being unable to sink back to feebleness.

With masses of such evidences of the power of mind over matter, either to weaken it or to build it up, it is high time for us all to invoke the aid of this spiritual influence in not a few days of life; but to call it a general practice of medicine is to attempt to make a part equal the whole. This feat the new practitioners are attempting to perform. They are even attempting to cure disease when it is far away from the alleged doctor—the doctor throwing his mental force a thousand miles, and making it land like a bombshell amid the works of the enemy. This is that reductio ad absurdum which has been common in all times. Phrenology was an attempt to carry a few general truths into a most detailed science: Socialism was an effort to take up the law of order and apply it until society should become a precise machine: Thoreau attempted to simplify man until he could live alone on ten dollars a year: Quakerism was an attempt to kill off all colors except drab, and all music except the sing-song of their speeches at meeting.

But all these efforts to force the universe into one fact or one fancy will fail, and the "Metaphysical Doctors" will have the mortification of taking some backsteps. They can help our world, but not by promulging, like a patent medicine, to cure every form of disorder. They should be satisfied with the study and practice of art which may accomplish much good for society.—David Swing, in Chicago Current.

UP IN THE BUSINESS.

No Need of References—He Had All the Qualifications.

He was a gentlemanly-looking fellow, dressed in elegant taste, and as he knocked at the Superintendent's office door no one would have suspected he was looking for a job.

"Good morning," said the Superintendent politely, as he came in.

"Good morning," replied the visitor. "I am in search of a position as conductor on your road."

"Well, we want a man about your size."

"What is the pay?"

"One hundred dollars a month."

"That's fair enough. I was paid that for the five years I was with the New York Central."

"You look like a good man. Got any references?"

"No, sir. I'm sorry to say I'm a stranger in Cincinnati."

"No references? That's unfortunate. Have you got anything to show that you know the duties of the position you seek?"

"Oh, yes; plenty. There's a house and lot in Hoboken, where my wife lives, which I paid $20,000 for; then there's a farm up in Orange County that cost me $12,000; some bank stock, a few United States bonds, a town lot in Jersey City, a—"

"That's quite enough," interrupted the Superintendent; "I see you know you business. Just call around this afternoon and I'll see what I can do for you. I always like to help a man who can make an ordinary salary meet all his wants.—N. Y. Telegram.

Pluck vs. Luck.

In an address delivered before the students of the Spencerian business college, Washington, D. C., June 29, 1869, among other things, Gen. James A. Garfield said:

"Now, young gentlemen, let me address you touching your success in life; and I hope the very brevity of my remarks will increase the chance of their making a lodgment in your minds. Let me beg you in the outset of your career, to dismiss from your minds all ideas of succeeding by luck. There is no more silly thought among young people than the foolish one that by-and-by something will turn up by which they will suddenly achieve fame or fortune. No, young gentlemen, things don't turn up in this world unless somebody turns them up. Inertia is one of the indispensable laws of matter, and things lie flat where they are until by some intelligent spirit (for nothing but spirit makes motion in this world) they are endowed with activity and life. Do not dream that some good luck is going to happen to you and give you a fortune. Luck is an ignis fatuus—you may follow it to ruin, but not to success. The great Napoleon, who believed in his destiny, followed it until he saw his star go down in blackest night, when the Old Guard perished around him, and Waterloo was lost. A pound of pluck is worth a ton of luck.

Young men talk of trusting to the spur of the occasion. That trust is vain. Occasions cannot make spurs, young gentlemen. If you expect to wear spurs you must win them. If you wish to use them you must buckle them to your own heels before you go into the fight. The success you may achieve is not worth the having unless you fight for it. Whatever you win in life you must conquer by your own efforts, and then it is yours—a part of yourself."

A Sad Curser.

The divorced wife of a Bonanza millionaire recently came to a mournful death principally from taking chloral which unsettled her mind and demoralized her whole physical system. She had been weakly and ailing and felt her need of something to drown her sorrows and brace her up. Had she taken Brown's Iron Bitters she would have been invigorated so that she could have forgotten her sorrows, and enjoyed healthy life. This valuable medicine cures general debility, tones the nerves, strengthens the muscles and aids digestion.

Which scrofula has upon the system must be arrested, and the blood must be purified, or serious consequences will ensue. It expels every trace of impurity from the blood, and bestows new life and vigor upon every function of the body, enabling it to entirely overcome disease.

After a druggist has filled a perscription it belongs to him, and not the customer who brought it to his store.

CHOLERA is rapidly moving westward and will soon appear in this country. In order to prevent disastrous effects from its ravages every preventive should be employed, and the system should be in perfect condition. At this season of the year the system is in a weak state and easily susceptible to dangerous disease. Pain in the back, weariness, lassitude, headache, dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver complaints are but the result of neglect. During the last visitation of cholera to this country no medicine was found equal to Mishler's Herb Bitters, both as a preventive and cure, and it has been equally successful in all the diseases above mentioned. It renews and invigorates the blood, restoring to health and strength, and thus shielding the system from disease.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

Out Door Sports.

With the opening of the season of outdoor sports comes the time of trouble for the poor victims of Hay Fever and Rose Cold. For them flowers have no odor, and the summer little of no beauty. To sniff, sneeze and wipe their weeping eyes for three or four successive months—this is their pitiable portion. There is no help in sea voyages, there is no help in high mountain air. But there is a positive cure in Ely's Cream Balm. Try it. If you are going to suffer it is because you neglect a remedy as sure as it is cheap and pleasant.

George Freeze went to Detroit last Friday morning.

Landon Dudley and wife with their little son visited at E. W. Freese's last Thursday and Friday. They left here Friday afternoon for Chelsea.

The town is extremely quiet this week, in fact seems to be suffering from the state of inertia into which it has fallen. Will some one kindly rouse it by a little excitement? Almost anything will do. An exhibition of sleep walking, by a couple of young gentlemen, for instance.

BRITTON BUDGET.

John Britton returned Tuesday evening. He says visiting is hard work.

Weather still uncomfortable.

The stave mill started Wednesday to run a few days and cut out the bolts in stock.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

The Soldier's home committee came at sunset, viewed Vineyard when evening shadows draped its faults with obscurity, and said they were favorably impressed with its hills, dales and fish globe. They had a nice ride over its roads the morning shower made free of dust, supper with their host afterward, and looked pleased as they professed when going back to their train. Donaldson's Circus stayed longer, had a good crowd in the evening that appreciated antics, and went home equally well satisfied. The week has averaged pleasant, though complaint of hard times, dull trade, and want of employment at remunerative price, goes up like smoke of incence, and that somebody else is to blame, is the only faith on which the many can agree. Dr. Barton Spear has gone to an insane asylum at Chicago, and Mr. Ide has suddenly become demented. Dr. Palmer is on the sick list again and proposes to try what Florida's climate can do for him this winter. Petty thieving is epidemic, and any thing left out of doors depreciates in value with its owner if found all right in the morning.

ONSTED ODDS.

Last Sabbath we were agreeably surprised to see our former pastor Elder Linderman in the pulpit and listen to one of his pleasing discourses. He was pastor here and in Rome some twelve years ago; at present and since that time he has been in Penn. He is out to attend the memorial services of his lately departed wife, which were held last Sunday evening at the Free Will Baptist church of Rome, with large attendance. He has the heartfelt sympathy of all.

Building still progresses.

Mr. Verrie, foreman of the bridge men on this road, has his building well commenced. It is located between the meat market and Mr. Glenn's store on Main street and will be quite an addition to Onsted.

The carpenter work on Mr. Snow's house is being done by Mr. Charles Smith and is nearly completed. The house is just north of the one he sold to Mr. H. Pulver and similar to that, very tasty, and will be another addition to the place.

Messrs Charles and Marsh have their stock of hardware in and a good stock it is; we wish them the success they deserve.

A short time since, Fred Morton's pony got away from near Mr. Gibb's store, ran north to the corner, turned east for a mile dash, then south for another mile, then west for a third mile, and again south for the home stretch, bringing up at home with cap, buggy and everything in taste. We think the pony has some thorough-bred in her to run four mile heats.

Monday evening those waiting for the train were detained longer than usual. The reason was plain when the train came as there were eleven cars of coal between the engine and coaches. The morning freight could not bring them, and suppose they had to be got out.

Chas. Marshal, our blacksmith has his brother John helping him now and they seem to be busy all the time.

The much and long needed rain descended on this place last Saturday afternoon and night, and the benefit derived therefrom is incalculable; we never have seen corn grow as fast.

We are inclined to think that Michigan is moving toward the torrid zone or is there already, as the mercury for the past week or longer has stood at 90° or more; Tuesday 96°.

There is considerable of a country village about Monroe. Cows are permitted peacefully to pasture in its streets, and all its pretty girls chew gum, as witness the following from the Monroe Democrat:

It seems to be in the air—that is chewing gum. About every woman and girl in town has a "gob of gum" in her mouth. Their tongues wag and their jaws come together like a pair of steam shears. And they keep moving from morning until night, only stopping long enough to eat their meals. The other day a young lady from the country was in the city, and before entering a store to do some trading threw out her "cud." A little urchin saw it fall and ran to pick it up. He missed his calculation, stubbed his toe, and fell head foremost into the gutter, nearly splitting his head and dislocating his wrist. Boys ought to be careful of what they try to pick up on the streets.

It is a curious fact that the Magazine of American History has been obliged to print a third edition of its July number to meet the extraordinary demand for its eight introductory "War Studies." The articles on the Seventh Regiment of New York have created no little comment.

Some good races are promised on the new fair ground track at Adrian next Saturday forenoon.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT, JULY 1, 1885.

For this report returns have been received from 1095 correspondents, representing 740 townships. Six hundred and sixty-three of these returns are from 425 townships in the southern four tiers of counties.

The probable total yield of wheat in Michigan the present year is 25,373,682 bushels. These figures are found by multiplying the number of acres in wheat in each county, in May, as returned to this office by supervisors, by the average yield per acre in each county as estimated by crop correspondents. This estimated yield per acre, is 356,407 bushels more than the yield in 1884. The yield per acre as estimated, for the southern four tiers of counties is 17 and 27-hundredths bushels, and for the northern counties 16 and 39-hundreths bushels.

The correspondents in their notes with few exceptions, report the wheat in a very promising condition. The Hessian fly is present in a number of localities,—in greatest numbers in the southwestern part of the State where it has so greatly damaged the crop in former years,—and frost has also done some damage, particularly in Berrien county, but neither fly nor frost will noticeably affect the crop in the State.

The total number of bushels of wheat harvested in the State in 1884 was 25,017,275, of which 21,510,679 bushels were grown in the southern four tiers of counties, 3,506,596 bushels in the counties north of the southern four tiers. The yield in the southern section was 239,807 bushels less, and in the northern section 112,483 bushels more than estimated in this office in October, 1884. The number of acres reported in wheat the present year is 1,480,055.

These figures for nearly 95 per cent of all the townships in the State, are taken from the returns of supervisors to this office, and are estimated for the remaining townships, 23 of which are in the Upper Peninsula and only ten in the southern four tiers of counties. The ten townships in the southern four tiers of counties for which estimates have been made are Casco in Allegan, Albion in Calhoun, Westhalia in Clinton, Hanlin in Eaton, Summit in Jackson, Wyoming in Kent, Georgetown in Ottawa, Antwerp in VanBuren, Northfield in Washtenaw, and Springwells in Wayne county.

Reports have been received of the quantity of wheat marketed by farmers during the month of June at 163 elevators and mills. Of these 147 are in the southern four tiers of counties, which is 31 per cent of the whole number of elevators and mills in these counties. The total number of bushels reported marketed is 297,506, of which 100,307 bushels were marketed in the first or southern tier of counties; 105,390 bushels in the second tier; 36,562 bushels in the third tier; 39,381 bushels in the fourth tier, and 15,866 bushels in the counties north of the southern four tiers. At 24 elevators and mills, or 15 per cent of the whole number from which reports have been received, there was no wheat marketed during the month.

The total number of bushels of wheat reported marketed in the eleven months, August—June, is 8,468,513.

In the southern four tier of counties eight per cent, and in the northern counties five per cent,—nearly 1,900,000 bushels, of the 1884 wheat crop is yet in farmers' hands.

The condition of other crops, expressed in per cent of condition one year ago, is, for the State, as follows: Corn, 87; oats, 96; barley, 93; clover, meadows and pastures, 92; timothy, meadows and pastures, 92; clover sowed this year 95. The condition of corn compared with vitality and growth of average years is 85. Thirteen per cent of the corn planted failed to grow.

Apples, in the southern four tiers of counties promise 52 per cent, and in northern counties 62 per cent of an average crop.

RE-ORGANIZED.

The Old Lenawee Soldiers' and Sailors' Association Revived.

A meeting was held in the hall of the Workingmen's association, in Adrian Monday, for the purpose of re-organizing the Lenawee County Soldiers' and Sailors' Association, which was, last year, merged into the G. A. R. association, held at Devils lake. The meeting was called for 10 A. M., but it was thought best by those present to adjourn until afternoon. This was done.

There were some forty or fifty old soldiers present when the meeting assembled after dinner. The meeting was organized by calling C. R. Miller to the chair. A. W. Mills, of Tecumseh, was made secretary. A statement of the action under which the county organization was merged into the G. A. R. association was made by Capt. Graves.

The question of re-organizing then came up for discussion. There was a very general expression in favor of re-organization, and a motion to that effect was put on its passage. The motion included the adoption of the constitution and by-laws of the old association. After considerable discussion the motion was carried unanimously.

After the reading of the constitution and by-laws, a motion was passed, adopting all amendments noted in the records of the old organization, up to the date of its formal disbandment. A committee consisting of H. M. Parker, R. B. Robbins and A. W. Mills was appointed to examine the records of the association, and suggest such changes and amendments as may be deemed necessary, and report at the first regular meeting of the association.

The election of officers for the organization resulted as follows:

President—R. B. Robbins.
Vice Pres.—H. M. Parker.
Secretary—A. W. Mills.
Treasurer—M. T. Cole.

For Second Vice Presidents—1st. ward, Adrian, C. R. Miller; 2d ward Chas. M. Cone; 3d ward, P. B. Reasoner; 4th ward, J. B. Allan; Adrian, M. L. Robinson; Blissfield, Dayton Parker; Clinton, Darwin Bainbridge; Cambridge, Samuel Morey; Dover, Darwin Warren; Deerfield, Byron Stansbury; Fairfield, H. B. Robb; Franklin, Albert Camburn; Hudson, Ed. Southworth; Madison, Wm. D. Myers; Medina, not represented; Macon, Horace Burger; Ogden, A. J. Hodges; Palmyra, Lucius Alexander; Raisin, James Cairns; Ridgeway, John Britton; Riga, J. D. Ward; Rome, George Fleming; Rollin, not represented; Seneca, C. B. Morgan; Tecumseh S. P. Hosmer; Woodstock, J. H. Underwood.

It was voted that no other meeting of the association be held this year.

On motion the president, vice president, secretary and treasurer were appointed a committee to fix upon the time and place for holding the meeting of the association for the year 1886. Thirty-one names were registered and dues paid on same as members of the new organization. The meeting then adjourned.—Times.

STATE TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

The State Teachers' Institute for Lenawee County will be held at Adrian, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M., Monday, Aug. 17, and closing 4 P. M., Friday, Aug. 28. Mr. A. E. Curtis, Adrian, local committee. It is becoming a well established fact that an interchange of views, such as is given in these Institutes, is of great practical benefit to those who attend them. The teachers that are found in the front ranks of their profession are generally those who take interest enough in their work to avail themselves of such means of improvement. The institute law allows teachers, whose schools are in session at the time appointed for the County Institute, held under the direction of the State Superintendent, to close their schools during the continuance of such Institute without forfeiting their wages for as many half days as they are in attendance at the Institute. This removes a cause that has prevented many teachers from attending these Institutes in the past; and in view of the inducements to self-improvement thus furnished by the law, County Examiners and School Boards will both exercise wisdom and practise justice by giving preference to those teachers, other things being equal, who seek all such means to better prepare themselves for the work of their profession. It is designed to make the work in these Institutes as practical as possible, and thus meet the wants of the teachers of all grades in their every-day work. At the same time it will be the purpose of every worker to raise the standard of the profession of teaching, and to gain for it that dignity to which it is entitled. Especial attention will be given to such subjects as have been recently added to the list of those in which teachers are required to pass examination before obtaining certificates. The exercises will be conducted by persons of extended experience, known ability, and eminent success. The morning and afternoon sessions will be devoted to the discussion of topics of particular interest to teachers, while the evening lectures will be of a popular character. There will be no tuition or enrollment fee.—Full particulars in regard to board, etc., may be obtained upon application to the local committee.

—Adam's Hotel at Sand Lake—Roomy, Cool, Comfortable. A good table and courteous attention. Reduced rates. Guests entertained at the low price of ONE DOLLAR PER DAY. Good boats and fishing facilities. Your patronage will be appreciated. Hotel recently enlarged.

CHARLEY ADAM.

Sylvia's Guardian;

—OR—

A YOUNG GIRL'S LOVE.

BY BERT WINWOOD.

"Miss Dreeme is wanted in the reception-room," announced one of the older teachers, in a loud, monotonous voice.

Sylvia rose from her seat at the open window, through which the soft May air drifted sparely. At least a score of girls were variously grouped in the school-room, but she instantly set apart from all. At the moment of the interruption she had just erected a charming air-castle, and was peopling it according to her poetic fancy.

"Who is it, Miss Briggs?" she eagerly inquired. "My guardian?"

Miss Briggs could not say. She had simply been sent with the message, and had delivered it.

The girl's heart was beating rapidly as she stole down the stairs and along the gloomy old hall. What would her unknown guardian be like? A thousand times had she pictured him in her dreams. She imagined him tall and straight, with a strong, earnest face, dark hair and eyes full of tenderness and truth—a kind, manly man, one upon whom it would be a pleasure to lean.

Would he equal her expectations? A mist rose before Sylvia's eyes as she stood at the door of the reception-room, afraid to advance. Her life had been so lonely and sorrowful, poor child, and she had such need of friends. It was easy to fancy the happiness of her future was at stake.

"Come in, Miss Dreeme," said the authoritative voice of Madam Pinkney, the lady principal. "I wish to present you to Mrs. Dalton."

Sylvia drew a deep breath, and the mist was gone in a moment. Sitting bolt upright, just across the apartment, she beheld a thin, angular figure, primly dressed in drab-colored silk. For an instant a pair of cold, light-blue eyes seemed to transfix her with their searching gaze.

"I fancied my guardian, Mr. Castleton, had come for me," she faltered, feeling a vague sense of disappointment.

The lady frowned.

"I am here in my nephew's stead. We decided between us that I was the proper person to act as chaperon."

Sylvia had never heard of Mrs. Dalton before. But she had called Mr. Castleton "nephew," so she made an effort to overcome her instinctive dislike of the woman.

"Do you live at Ingleside? And are you come to take me home with you?"

"Yes," Mrs. Dalton replied to both questions. "I reside with my nephew, and you are to go back with me. Though why Mark should consent to burden himself with a hoydenish schoolgirl is more than I can understand. It was very selfish and inconsiderate of your father to leave you to his care. He was no relation, and had not the shadow of a claim upon him."

The girl's eyes filled with sudden tears.

"I loved my father very dearly," she said, a tremor in her voice. "At the last he was greatly concerned about my future, and fancied this was the best thing he could do for me."

"No doubt," sarcastically. "He knew all about my nephew's long purse and kind heart. Of course he was very fortunate in being able to fasten you upon a person of Mark's wealth and generosity."

A deep flush rose to Sylvia's beautiful face. Was her hunger for sympathy and love to be answered in this way? She felt a momentary temptation to turn her back upon the hard, cold woman, and go out into the world to struggle by herself.

"Papa left some money," she said. "I am sure he never intended I should be a burden upon any body."

"Humph! I doubt if there is enough to keep you out of the poorhouse a week, if left to your own resources. But it is no affair of mine. How soon can you have your boxes ready? I do not propose wasting an unnecessary moment here."

"I will send one of my servants to Miss Dreeme's assistance," interposed Madam Pinkney. "Half an hour will suffice in which to complete her preparations and say her adieux." In the next breath she added, conciliatingly: "Miss Dreeme was considered one of my most promising pupils. She has real talents and ability. You will find her a pleasant addition to your home circle, Mrs. Dalton."

"Allow me to say that I am the best judge of what is agreeable or otherwise. The girl looks to me like a young savage. Her presence is one of the evils my nephew's soft-heartedness has rendered necessary, and must be endured—for the present."

Sylvia turned sadly away. She was ashamed to weep, but all the beautiful castles she had built in air had tumbled about her head since entering the reception-room, and she felt like one gazing across a pile of gloomy ruins.

Mrs. Dalton scarcely spoke to her during the brief, lonesome journey, but sat primly-erect, pretending to be absorbed in the scenery. The few glances with which she favored her were any thing but friendly ones.

It was early evening when they reached Ingleside, a handsome old-fashioned house toward which the city had crept with giant strides, and now completely encircled. Mrs. Dalton led the way to a large, pleasant chamber on the second floor.

"I shall come for you in ten minutes," she said, ere departing. "Mr. Castleton is at home, and will expect to see you this evening."

Sylvia wearily bathed her face, and brushed out the clinging curls of nut-brown hair. She could not help thinking how wan and hopeless was the face that looked back at her from the depths of the mirror. No trace of the morning's dreamy brightness was left.

When Mrs. Dalton came for her she followed the woman listlessly. All the interest she had felt in her unknown guardian was gone. For a moment after being ushered into the spacious library where he sat she did not even look up.

"And this is my ward, Sylvia Dreeme? Welcome to Ingleside."

The voice was winning, musical and kind. For her life Sylvia could not have resisted the impulse to drop her fluttering white hand into that so cordially extended.

Then she raised her eyes. An involuntary cry broke from her. Tall and straight, with a strong, earnest face and eyes beaming with tenderness and truth—the ideal of her dreams was there before her! With this only difference. She had mentally pictured a man past middle-age, and Mark Castleton could not have been a day over thirty.

"You seem startled," he said, looking at her earnestly. "Is any thing amiss?"

The girl returned a stammering reply, a deep flush of embarrassment upon her face. Fortunately, Mrs. Dalton came to her relief with one of her tart remarks.

"I have brought Miss Dreeme home with me, Mark, according to your insolent orders. What is to be done with her now she is here?"

"Make her as comfortable and happy as possible," was the smiling rejoinder.

Mrs. Dalton gave her head a toss.

"That is easily done. All a schoolgirl wants is plenty to eat and leisure to do as she pleases."

The firm, warm hand closed over Sylvia's with a lingering pressure.

"Poor child," he said, in a kind tone, "I know you are quite alone in the world. I wish you to feel that Ingleside is a home to you in every sense of the word."

The girl's lonely heart went out to him at once.

"You knew my father," she said, tears welling into her lovely eyes. "I am glad of that. It makes you seem less a stranger."

"Yes. We met abroad, and were comrades in many a pilgrimage. A strong attachment grew up between us. It is real pleasure to befriend Randolph Dreeme's daughter."

"I—I—was afraid you might think me a burden."

His grave, kind eyes lingered upon her face a moment.

"Any thing but that, Sylvia. Never again entertain such a thought."

Mrs. Dalton seemed to think it time to interpose.

"You have not questioned the child in regard to the use she has made of her opportunities," she said, tartly. "They have been wasted, of course. It is always the way."

Mr. Castleton looked at her with an amused smile.

"Did not Madam Pinkney have a good report to make?"

"She said all she could conscientiously. But that was very little."

"What shall I do, Aunt Margaret? Catechise my ward in French, German and Italian?"

"You might ask her to play and sing," Mrs. Dalton answered, with a disdainful shrug. "It will be a fair test of her ability."

Mr. Castleton again took possession of the hand he had released a moment before.

"There is a piano in the next room," he said, in a tone of mock gravity. "Sylvia shall be put to the crucial test immediately."

There was a wistful expression in the girl's eyes as they questioned his on the way out. As if in answer to it, he bent and whispered:

"It is better to humor Aunt Margaret. Do not let her make you unhappy. Her bark is much worse than her bite."

Mrs. Dalton was close behind them. She selected the most difficult piece of music on the rack.

"Play this, Miss Dreeme."

At first Sylvia's touch was soft and light as a snow-flake. But as the theme grew in intensity the heavy chords thundered and reverberated through the apartment. Even Mrs. Dalton drew back astonished. Never had she listened to such playing from an amateur.

"Some persons play well who have no voice for singing," she said, biting her lip as she again tossed over the innumerable sheets of music. "Here is an air from one of the Italian operas. Do you feel equal to undertaking it?"

"I will do the best I can," Sylvia answered, sweetly.

Her singing was perfection. The fresh, clear voice floated through the room, filling the whole house with sweet, subtle melody. With the first note Mrs. Dalton realized that she had made a mistake in urging the matter, and fell back with an ominous tightening of her thin lips. Was the young girl in league with the evil one to be so remarkably gifted?

Mr. Castleton had stood by, perfectly silent, but with a changing face. When Sylvia would have risen from the piano, he came a step nearer.

"Will you sing once more—an English song?" he said, in a low tone.

Sylvia selected one at random. Mr. Castleton was now standing where she could see his face. She saw him start at the first word, and grow deadly pale. As the song proceeded, he leaned against the wall and covered his face with his hands.

What did his agitation mean? Had the song awakened unpleasant recollections? Should she desist?

Suddenly Mrs. Dalton swept her fingers from the keys with no gentle movement.

"What possessed you to choose that song?" she sharply whispered. "Never let me hear it again."

Sylvia rose hurriedly. As she stood at the window, trying to control her beating pulses, Mr. Castleton crossed to her side. Though paler than usual, he was again the calm, self-possessed man of the world.

"You sing and play remarkably well, Sylvia. It is a rare gift. I wish to thank you for the pleasure you have given me."

Pleasure mixed with pain? Sylvia so fancied. After lingering a moment longer, he abruptly quitted the room.

Mrs. Dalton waited until the echo of his step died away, then coldly said:

"I may as well offer a word of explanation. Mark quarrelled with the lady he loved—or, rather, she with him. It amounts to the same thing. She went abroad, and is somewhere in Europe now. She and Mark used to sing that song together."

"How could she leave him?" Sylvia faltered, conscious of a vague thrill of pain.

Mrs. Dalton gave her a sharp glance. "Isabel Grier is a very proud woman. Having taken a false step, I believe she would sooner die than make the first overtures toward reconciliation."

"I never believed in that sort of pride."

"Did you not?" her lip taking a scornful curve. "Well, we are not all constituted alike."

That night Sylvia thought more than was good for her of Mark Castleton and the lady love from whom he had been so cruelly severed. All the romance of her nature had been aroused.

"He must have been very fond of this Isabel Grier," she told herself. "The wound has not been wholly healed. It may never be." And she sighed, without in the least knowing why.

Several days wore on. The grave kindness of her guardian won upon Sylvia hourly. They walked and drove together, and sometimes spent whole mornings in the library, reading some favorite author. At last it came to be quite the rule to seek refuge from Mrs. Dalton's sneers and coldness in the society of Mark Castleton.

"You fill a niche that was empty before you came," he said one day, looking at her with a deep light in his handsome eyes. "I could not spare you now."

A deep flush rose on her cheeks.

"Ingleside is the first real home I have known since papa died."

"You are happy here, Sylvia?"

"O, very happy."

"I am glad of that. You must never leave us."

The sweet dream of content was soon to be broken. Mrs. Dalton was a shrewd woman, and soon saw in what direction guardian and ward were drifting. It did not suit her plans that the child she had affected to despise should ever remain at Ingleside as mistress in her stead. The next morning, as Sylvia was gathering dew-wet violets in the garden, she came down the walk and paused beside her.

"Have you formed any plans for the future, Miss Dreeme?" she inquired, after a few idle remarks had passed on both sides.

"No," Sylvia answered, with a careless laugh. "Like the birds and the flowers, I have taken no thought of to-morrow."

Mrs. Dalton frowned.

"That is unwise in a person endowed with reason. Of course you cannot expect to remain here forever, as you are now."

"Why not?" said the girl, looking up with a start.

"Why not?" mimicked her tormentor. "Your own good sense should tell you the reason. The bread of dependence must be sweet to your palate."

"What do you mean, Mrs. Dalton?"

"Do you not know that you are living here upon charity? That Mark's money pays for the food you eat and the clothes you wear? I fancied enough had been said upon this subject before you came."

Sylvia had almost forgotten it. She could not bring herself to believe the woman's cruel words had any real foundation.

"It is not possible that papa left me penniless," she faltered, her sweet face growing very pale.

"The beggarly sum he left you was spent long ago. I have investigated the subject. Mark has even paid some of your school-bills. If you have any spirit, you will decline becoming indebted to him further."

Mrs. Dalton turned coldly away. Having dropped her Parthian arrow, she was satisfied to await the result.

Poor Sylvia! It was a cruel awakening. Sinking down beside the sweet-smelling violets, she shed the bitterest tears of her lifetime.

She could not live upon Mr. Castleton's bounty another hour. She must leave Ingleside at once—her dear, happy home. She could teach, give music-lessons, or, with her voice, go upon the stage. Many ways of self-support were open to her.

In her abstraction she failed to hear the step descending the walk. It paused beside her; a hand fell lightly upon her bowed head.

"Why, Sylvia, my little friend, what is the matter?"

Mr. Castleton's voice! The poor girl started up, flushing with shame, and trembling with misery.

"Mr. Castleton, I wish to know the truth," she said, in a tone of gentle dignity. "Upon what terms am I living at Ingleside? What was the amount of the bequest left by my father?"

He drew back, visibly startled and embarrassed.

"Really, Sylvia, I am unable to say. I should be compelled to look over my accounts and—"

"You can tell me whether the money has all been used or not," she interrupted.

No answer. He stood looking at her wistfully, his face full of sympathy and might have told me," she sobbed. "It was not kind to let me remain under such a delusion, unknowingly living upon your charity."

His face changed.

"What difference did it make, Sylvia? I have enough and to spare. I hoped you would never know. It was a real pleasure to be able to do you a service."

She turned, trying in vain to suppress her sobs.

"I cannot remain at Ingleside, Mr. Castleton. You must realize the necessity of a change as fully as I do."

"But I will not let you leave me."

With a hasty stride he stood beside her, and was encircling her trembling figure with his arms.

"Sylvia, my darling, you do not know how you have brightened the old place by your presence. It has been like paradise since you came. Do not go. I will not permit it. Remain as—my wife."

For a moment her brain seemed to reel. It was so sudden, so unexpected. Growing deadly white, she lifted her startled eyes to his face.

"You cannot mean it, Mr. Castleton?"

"I do," he answered, in a fervid tone. "Your girlish beauty and innocence have won upon me from the first. A strong, deep passion has grown up in my heart. I should be very miserable if you left me."

She was looking at him steadily, but a sharp pang shot through her heart.

"I do not understand," she faltered. "I had been told that—that—you loved another."

"I fancied I did," he said, in a low voice. "But now I doubt. That feverish dream was different from the deep, abiding passion I feel now. But why speak or even think of it? Aunt Margaret told you the story, I suppose? It is well that you know it. Isabel Grier is as one dead to me. I never expect to see her again. You can be all and more to me than she has ever been."

What response was Sylvia to make? The tingling sweetness that seemed to shoot through her veins told its own story. Her head dropped against his shoulder, and she breathed a sigh of sweet content.

Never had Mrs. Dalton been more startled than when her handsome nephew led Sylvia into the cheerful morning-room where she sat, an hour later, and said, in his even tones:

"Miss Dreeme has consented to become a fixture at Ingleside. Not as my ward, but as my wife."

At first she could utter no word, but a ghastly smile slowly parted her thin lips.

"You are disposed to jest, I perceive," she faltered. "I must say, Mark, that I consider it in very bad taste."

Rising hastily, she left the room. Mr. Castleton and Sylvia looked smilingly into each other's face. They were too happy to care.

The week that went by was like a happy dream to the young girl. She flitted about the house gay and careless as a bird. Love had entered her heart, and the whole world was transformed. She seemed to be living a new life, as different from the old as day differs from night.

Mrs. Dalton utterly ignored the new relation that had grown up between the young people. It was part of her worldly-wise policy.

Sylvia felt like one who, having passed through storm and flood, com suddenly into calm waters, and sunlight, and a beautiful smiling sky. The chivalrous love of Mark Castleton was like a haven of rest. No more lonely hours or homesick longings. The memory of sweet content was fair.

One day Mark sat in his library alone, thinking of the new love that had blessed his life. "This new dream is a thousand times more precious than the old," he said to himself.

A servant entered with a letter. He turned deadly pale as he glance l at the superscription. Surely he recognized the handwriting?

Tearing it open, he read these words:

DEAR MARK,—I have returned from abroad my foolish pride lies at my feet in the dust. It was impossible to enjoy the romantic scenes of the old world while the weight of your displeasure rested upon me. From the moment I landed upon European soil my heart ached with an irresistible longing for America, and—you. It would have been death to remain, so I am back again. I know you love me as well as ever, and I never understood my own heart half so perfectly. The blame of that lovers quarrel was all mine, and I am ready to make all the reparation. I shall be with you nearly as soon as this letter. ISABEL.

The letter fell from his hand. He knew by the way his heart beat that the old spell had not lost its power. What was he to do? Ingleside was the last place for Isabel to come to, under the circumstances; but she was already on the way, and he did not know how or when to intercept her.

"She is a very proud woman," he groaned. "She will never forgive me."

Suddenly the thought of Mrs. Dalton came like an inspiration. The woman was a distant relative of Isabel's. She should receive the girl, and take her away to some quiet place until the first shock of disappointment had worn away.

He had just come to this conclusion when a sudden bustle became audible in the hall, and a woman's graceful figure, exquisitely clad in silks and laces, appeared in the open door.

"Dear Mark! I am so glad—so happy—so relieved to be back again, and—"

It was Isabel herself. The letter had been delayed, and she had arrived at almost the same moment.

Her trembling voice died away. Before Mark could speak or rise, she had tottered forward, and clasping her arms about his neck, hidden her tear-wet face upon his breast.

"Forgive me, Mark," she sobbed. "I have been so wretched without you! Tell me that all is forgiven and forgotten."

The proud, stately woman clung to him with all the abandon of an impetuous child.—Mark felt himself thrill and tremble under her caressing touch. Great drops came out thickly upon his forehead. She was so proud, so very beautiful! Her dark, brilliant eyes, when presently she raised them to his, were so full of pathetic pleading! How could he tell her in so many words that she had come too late?

For the moment, all his hopes and wishes seemed to be centred in Isabel. Coldness and distrust were forgotten. She never looked half so lovely or attractive.

"Heaven help us!" he faltered. "My poor darling, you do not know—"

She stopped his lips with an impetuous kiss.

"I can divine all you would say. You are still thinking of that miserable misunderstanding. Have I not taken all the blame to myself? I did wrong, but I have been cruelly punished. Do you forgive me, or shall I go down on my knees to sue for pardon?"

The breakfast taken in winter will determine our efficiency for work in the day, and will so influence our whole being for that period of time that no after-meal can correct. The breakfast in winter must contain more nitrogenous food than in summer: it is absolutely needed. You must store heat to furnish material for absorption and for maintaining vitality; add to this nitrogenous food something that will disengage heat from the blood and keep up temperature and you may defy the coldest day. Your face may feel it, your hands may feel it, but your body will be impervious to it and go on disengaging that inward heat which can alone stand against the lowest temperature without. If this first meal has been properly attended to we may presume that vital action can be maintained in full force for five hours at least before it needs replenishing.

J. S. Mace, of Chillicothe, Ohio, writes the following: "This is to certify that I suffered for one year with severe chronic rheumatism. After uring it a short time I found myself greatly benefited and eventually cured." Mishler's Bitters is infallible in kidney and affections.

Fancy red bathing suits brought from Paris are occasionally seen on our beaches.

There is a tendency to retain the pouf and looped skirt drapery by Paris dressmakers.

Short jackets, opening over full baby waists, are worn at seaside and country resorts.

Mitts are not worn with dressy costumes this summer. They are relegated to the house and negligee toilet.

The Princess or Gabrielle form of dress for little girls is moribund. It can not survive another season.

Double folds of canvas etamine, instead of linen collars, are worn as neck lingerie with traveling suits.

Fashions in dress are more various and individualized in Washington than in any fashionable city in the world.

Red and blue remain the favorite colors for combination in seaside wraps and frocks for ordinary wear along the beach.

Color on the edge is considered the proper and desirable thing in percale, linen, or lace collars and cuffs, for traveling wear.

Some ladies prefer a red silk bandanna kerchief, or one of plain Turkey red cotton, to any other covering for the head when bathing.

Sashes of moire, surah, and all sorts of soft, crapy silken and woolen stuffs are in high favor, and are worn in almost every style preferred.

Colored and white lawn collars, pleated and soft laundered, not stiff with starch, are taking the place of white linen bands for traveling and morning wear.

Bathing caps and hats are in fanciful shapes, and are variously of red and white-striped wool, gossamer rubber cloth, gray or black, and red or yellow oiled silk and coarse straw.

The latest fancy in bead ornamentation is to put pendant strands of copper or lead beads or porcelain imitations of the same on red serge and red flannel jackets for seaside wear.

Baby waists gathered on to yokes and belts at the waist line, worn with full gathered or pleated skirts, which may be tucked and trimmed with embroidery, but not flounced, are the features of little girls' dresses.

American bathing suits are very plain blouses with medium length skirts and half-long trousers; dark blue and gray are the preferred colors, with white or red braid for trimming. Serge flannel is the material.

The dress skirt, when not draped, is now generally sewed on the bottom of the bodice, whether it is round or pointed, and pleated are less fashionable on the other side than those that are shirred or gauges on to the waist.

Undressed kid or Suede gloves in tan shade remain the favorite wear for dressy toilets, but fine silk gloves in tan shades are also worn with such dresses, while fine lisle thread gloves are considered the correct wear with wash fabric frocks, no matter how handsome the make or material.

As a rule, hats for the seaside are fantastic and eccentric to the last degree, but some are seen in simple round shapes of white, soft Japanese straw, trimmed with only a scarf and bow of white or tinted mull or lace and fastened with gilt pins.—N. Y. Sun.

A MARVELOUS STORY

TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "28 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 28, 1882.

"Gentlemen: My father resides at Glover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from Scrofula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least ten years; but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.

Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 21, 1882. Yours gratefully,

HIRAM PHILLIPS."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Sores, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.

Ringworm Humor and Salt-Rheum.

RAYNHAM, MASS., Aug. 12, 1878.

C. I. Hood & Co.: Gentlemen— * * * * I have had ringworm humor and salt-rheum so badly that my body was covered with raw sores, so, also, my head and face. I have had any number of doctors in the last seven years, and none of them could cure me. One day my mother was in the city of Taunton, and found one of your cook books, and in reading it I found many people testifying to cures from the use of your Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I felt forced to try it, although I had seen many things advertised that never did me any good. I have now taken two small bottles and one large one of Sarsaparilla, and used three boxes of Ointment. I now call myself cured. Nothing can be seen of the humor but the dim outlines of the sores. I shall take two more bottles, and then the cure will be complete.

I am gratefully yours,

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gents—Please send me by express two bottles HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA and a few Cook Books for distribution. Your preparation has worked wonders in the case of my wife, who has been troubled with sick headache and biliousness for years. She only took one-half teaspoonful at a dose, and has not been so well for five years as now. She found that within a week after taking it she felt very much better, and is now entirely free from those severe headaches. She has not taken any of any account since last spring, and what little she had is lent to do some others some good, and we must have it in the house.

Yours truly,

SACRIFICE OF LIFE.

The Cost in Human Life of the War of the Rebellion.

The results obtained by Mr. Kirkley, a statistician of the Adjutant General's office, compiling from all attainable sources a list of the deaths on the Union side during the war, possess a melancholy but very strong interest at this time. It has been a very difficult task to gather names for this roll. So many perished unseen and unknown; so many rotted away in Southern prisons of whom every trace is lost, that the compiler might well despair of ever completing his task with anything like an approach to accuracy.

Patience and perseverance have at last accomplished the difficult task, however, and we have in Mr. Kirkley's tables what is at least the most accurate and complete death roll yet published, if not one that is absolutely without error. The registers of a dozen Southern prisons have not been secured—those at Americus, Atlanta, Augusta, Charleston, Lynchburg, Macon, Marietta, Mobile, Montgomery, Savannah, Shreveport and Tyler—and only partial records were obtained from Cahawba, Columbia, Florence, Millen and Salisbury; but with these exceptions the roll is substantially complete.

One of the most remarkable results arrived at, at least to the reader who knows nothing practically of war, is that more than twice as many men died from disease in the army as from the shot, shell, bayonet and sword of the enemy. One hundred and ten thousand and thirty-eight officers and men were killed outright or died of their wounds; but 224,586 died of disease. The number of those who are known to have died in captivity reaches the appalling total of 29,498.

Another remarkable fact is that over fifty per cent. more men were killed in action than died of wounds, the respective numbers being 62,896 and 40,777. At least three-fourths of the wounded must have recovered, partially at least, so that they did not die during the period covered by the inquiry, which ceases with the mustering out at the end of the war. How many veterans there are still among us who carry about their bodies the marks of violence suffered during the war, let the long pension rolls testify.

Mr. Kirkley's tables are arranged by States, so that we can tell just how many lives each one contributed to the cause. New York, of course, heads the list, with a total of 46,534; Ohio comes next, with 35,475; then Illinois, with 34,384; then Pennsylvania, with 33,183, and Indiana, with 26,672. Michigan, Missouri, Massachusetts, Wisconsin, Iowa and Kentucky contributed between 10,000 and 15,000 each; all the rest less than 7,000 each.

It is worthy of remark that every State now in the Union, except South Carolina, is represented on the list, and every Territory except Utah. There are only 15 from Georgia, 42 from Virginia, 78 from Mississippi, 141 from Texas, 215 from Florida, 345 from Alabama, and 360 from North Carolina. Arkansas contributed 1,713 and Tennessee 6,777. This is exclusive of colored troops, of whom 36,847 died, and does not take in non-combatants of either color.

The grand total of known deaths in the Union army was nearly 360,000. Adding as many more for the rebel losses—probably not an overestimate—and taking into account the navies on both sides, and the prisoners who died unaccounted, we reach a total of at least 800,000 men as the cost of the war to this country—nearly one-eighth of its entire voting population.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

MEXICO.

Some Incidents of Life in the Neighboring Republic.

A Pittsburgh gentleman, who visited the "Land of the Montezumas" a few years ago, related to the writer in a recent conversation some of the strange scenes and incidents which he witnessed while there. The Mexican cart, as he described it, is, or was, probably, the most singular vehicle that ever was evolved since the barbarous ages. Neither iron nor steel enters into its composition, nor does the workman use spokeshave, plane, or augur in its construction. The only materials he requires are cottonwood and rawhide, and the only tool an axe. Two blocks, round or oblong, it makes but little difference which, form the wheels. Through these he burns holes for the axletree. The body of the cart consists of poles or flat strips of timber, fastened together with rawhide. A rough pole serves for a tongue. When in motion, the wheels wabble in every direction but the right one, and for want of grease groan so as to be heard for miles. Breakdowns are so frequent that the roads are lined with the wrecks of these primitive vehicles.

Near a spring or water-hole in the State of Durango, many years ago, was found a large stone, the only one in the vicinity. It was very heavy, but a muleteer came along who had strength enough to lift it and throw it over his head. It fell in the direction of the City of Mexico. Since then every able-bodied native regards it a religious duty to give the stone a toss toward the capital. When our informant was there he was told that the stone had been advanced forty or fifty miles on its journey. If the same rate of progression is maintained, the stone may reach its journey's end by the beginning of the next century.

Hoop poles were a legal tender in one or two of the southern counties of Indiana—Posey County for one—before the war. Soap served a like purpose in Queretaro when our informant was there. He bought some fruit from a little girl, and handed her a dollar from which to take her pay. She counted out a number of cakes of soap, wrapped them in brown paper, and passed them over as change for the dollar. Protest was useless. It was the recognized currency of the place. The cakes were probably two inches long by one and a half wide, bore the official stamp of the town where issued, and also the name of the manufacturer. They were good for their face value as long as the stamp was visible.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

—Eight hundred short-horn cattle, bred in the province of Ontario, Canada, were recently shipped from Montreal to Great Britain.

A MAIL-CARRIER'S EXPERIENCE.

A great while ago—long before the late war—there was a young man who carried the mail between Madison and Macon, Georgia. His name was George Lovic. He used his eyes and ears pretty well, and never—fond as he was of a good story—told lies. To say "Bob Lovic says so" was to certify to the truth of a statement, which which was certainly to his credit; and, moreover, he was as honest as the day, and could have been entrusted with untold gold or unacounted diamonds. Morally you could not find a fault with Bob. Mentally, he was very well, for an uneducated man; but he had one great failing—great particularly in the eyes of pretty Annie Wesley, who otherwise esteemed Bob perfection. He had allied himself with a certain class of persons who term themselves "free thinkers."

This theological difference at last led to a little quarrel, and Bob tried to get Annie out of his mind, but failed to do it; and Annie was very miserable, as well for the sake of Bob's soul as for herself; for, though she had offers in plenty, not one—not even rich John Grab, who had ever so many acres of land—could be compared for a moment in her mind to Bob, had Bob only held proper sentiments.

So, though they kept apart for a whole month, at last one bright morning, as Bob rode along, slowly and stupidly for him, he saw, sitting under a tree, a little figure in a blue dress that he coudn't pass to save his life. So he stopped his horse and called out—

"Annie, is that you?"

"Yes, Bob," said Annie, showing a pair of wet eyes. "I came here on purpose to see you. I've talked in my poor weak, womanish words, but you talk so much better than I, that of course, it's of no use; and all the while there is One who talks so plainly to us, and the words are here; and I've brought them to you and please, dear Bob, to read them, and perhaps—"

She did not finish the sentence, but placed a pretty Bible in Bob's hand.

"I've had it bound very nicely for you, and oh! for my sake read it—it will teach you so much, Bob—so very much!"

Bob took the book. For a moment he felt annoyed, and much like sneering, but Annie was very dear to him; so he kept his anger down for her sake, thanked her for her present, and placed it in the breast-pocket of his coat.

An Important Discovery.

The most important Discovery is that which brings the most good to the greatest number. Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs, and Colds, will preserve the health and save life, and is a priceless boon to the afflicted. Not only does it possively cure Consumption, but Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Throat, Chest, and Lungs, yield at once to its wonderful curative powers. If you doubt this, get a Trial Bottle Free, at C. A. Wright & Co's Drug store.

After a druggist has filled a perscription it belongs to him, and not the customer who brought it to his store.

The Secret of Wealth.

Broken down invalids do you wish to gain flesh, to acquire an appetite, to enjoy a regular habit of body, to obtain refreshing sleep, to feel and know that every fiber and tissue of your system is being braced up and renovated. If so commence at once a course of Golden Seal Bitters. In one week you will be convalescent. In a month you will be well. Don't despair because you have a weak constitution. Fortify the body against disease by purifying all the fluids with Golden Seal Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus forearmed. The liver, the stomach, the bowels, the kidneys, are rendered disease proof by this great invigorant. Ruinous bills for medical attendance may be avoided by counteracting the first symptoms of sickness with these Bitters. They are recommended from friend to friend, and the sale increases daily. We warrant a cure. They are a positive cure also for all female complaints. In these diseases they have no equal. Take no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

In the literary as well as the military world, the most powerful abilities will often be found concealed under a rustic garb.

Out Door Sports.

With the opening of the season of outdoor sports comes the time of trouble for the poor victims of Hay Fever and Rose Cold. For them flowers have no odor, and the summer little or no beauty. To snuff, sneeze and wipe their weeping eyes for three or four successive months,—this is their pititable portion. There is no help in sea-voyages, there is no help in high mountain air. But there is a positive cure in Ely's Cream Balm. Try it. If you continue to suffer it is because you neglect a remedy as sure as it is cheap and pleasant.

Vasser girls ate 692 pounds of candy last year. Sweets to the sweet. But alas! they ate also forty bushels of onions.

"The ladies especially go into ecstacies over Parker's Hair Balsam," writes Mr. J. H. Decker, druggist, of Finlay, Ohio. They say it is the most elegant dressing they ever used." Stops falling hair, restores color, promotes growth.

California has more suicides than any other State in the Union.

News About Town.

It is the current report about town that Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs is making some remarkable cures with people who are troubled with Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis, and Consumption. Baker & Hall will give any person a trial bottle free of cost. It is guaranteed to relieve and cure. Price 50 cents and $1.

"Hunt's Remedy is the most effect medicine I ever used in my practice for dropsy and kidney diseases. It has almost raised the dead. L. A. PALMER, M.D., Maystic.

A force that fights successfully against disease. A host in itself, is Hunt's Remedy.

DEATH OF CHARLES J. BREWER.

In the demise of Charley Brewer Tecumseh loses one of her most highly esteemed young business men. The deceased was thirty-eight years of age and nearly his whole live has been passed in this village. From early boyhood he has been a resident here and during all these years none knew him but to love him. We will not detail the history of his life. After passing through school he engaged in the grocery business for several years, and at his father's death he took an interest in the foundry. For the past two years he has been in feeble health and he left the office one year ago last May, never to return for active duty. On the 12th of May last he went to Hot Springs, in hopes that the climate and waters there might improve his health, but he was doomed to disappointment. He left there on the 16th of July and arrived home on Saturday, July 18th, but only survived until the Saturday following.

The funeral services were held at his residence on Union street last Sunday afternoon at six o'clock. They were conducted jointly by Revs Babbitt and Phelps. The Knights of Honor furnished an escort of twelve men and these personal friends of the deceased officiated as bearers: P. S. McKinney, S. W. Bordine, C. A. Slayton, I. S. Osborn, S. W. Anderson, Fred Rosecrans.

The hour chosen for the funeral was a beautiful one—just before sunset. Nature herself seemed to sympathize with the large number of mourners in attendance. All were mourners there. A lengthy procession followed his coffin to the grave, and just as the day melted into the shadows of twilight his remains were dropped into their final resting place.

His stricken widow and fatherless children have the heartfelt sympathy of our entire community, in this sad dispensation. An obituary notice, such as the sterling qualities of the departed deserves, will appear in these columns at some future time.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONDOLENCE.

TECUMSEH LODGE No. 870, K. of H.
July 28th, 1885.

Since the last preceding regular meeting of this Lodge, the grave has closed over what was mortal of a brother, who without ostentation has fulfilled a career of usefulness, of gentleness and manly endeavor well worthy the emulation of members of this order. Chas. J. Brewer was made a charter member of this lodge at its organization in January, 1878. He deserves to be, and will be remembered by every member of the Lodge for his fidelity to his obligations as a Knight of Honor as well as for his genial, kind and friendly nature. Renouncing aspiring ambitions, he found his highest pleasures in the quiet performance of daily duties, and did every work of heart and hand as ever in the eye of Him to whose dispensation we humbly bow.

Resolved, That we deeply deplore the loss of our esteemed brother and tender to his family and friends our sincere condolence in their affliction.

Resolved, That this memorial be spread upon the records of the lodge, and a copy transmitted to the widow of our deceased brother.

The above malicious slander appeared in the columns of our esteemed contemporary last week, alluding to our conduct while on the press excursion. As a consequence of this betrayal of confidence at the hands of a brother editor, we have had to suppress every copy of last week's HERALD which was likely to come within the sacred precincts of our domicile. If we were inclined to be revengeful and tell all we know of Scove's conduct on that memorable trip, but no, we will spare him this time.—Tecumseh News.

Considerable sport has been occasioned for several days past from the fact that two of our prominent citizens have been disputing as to who was the swiftest runner. In order to settle it beyond a doubt they repaired to Bills' race track last Monday night, where they found a large crowd ready to see the fun, and measured off twelve rods, stripped to the waist and toed the mark. At the word "go" there was a mighty rush and the audience could hardly catch their breath as the contestants sped by them at a break-neck pace. When about three rods had been run, one of the contestants tripped and "great was the fall thereof." He was picked up and carried home on a stretcher, and acknowledged with a groan that George was too much for him.

He had it on Thursday of last week, but when he looked for it on Friday it was gone—sock and all. Thursday evening with his wife he came down town, and he believes the money was abstracted at that time although he discovered nothing suspicious on his return. Mr. Manly is a hard working young man, and can ill afford to lose so large an amount. He will give $100 for the recovery of the money.

BASE BALL LONG AGO.

Base Ball was played in this town seventeen years ago. George Merritt accidentally found the other day a printed program of a celebrated game which took place here on the 4th of August, 1868, which we print in full. That is the program, not the game. It would be impossible to print even a feeble description of the latter.

The Flying Snails of East Tecumseh vs. the Lively Mud Turtles of West Tecumseh. A match game of base ball will be played between these celebrated clubs on the grounds of the Tecumseh base ball club, on Tuesday, Aug. 4, 1868. The following celebrated players will appear without fail:

Flying Snails—L. Sayiers, p.; H. Ensign, c.; A. Patterson, s. s.; C. M. Burlingame, 1 b.; H. Jones, 2 b.; J. D. Robbins, 3 b.; H. Weller, r. f.; O. McNair, c. f.; G. T. Ketcham, l. f.

Lively Mud Turtles—H. Fisher, p.; Geo. L. Graves, c.; F. Howard, s. s.; L. C. Blood, 1 b.; J. Wastell, 2 b.; R. Stretch, 3 b.; W. D. Meeker, r. f.; A. Pelham, c. f.; G. Merritt, l. f.

Umpire—Thos. Chas. Cummins.
Scorers—L. P. Troon, C. H. McConnell.
Surgeons—Kah Go Ga Gah Bowh, Pea En Kur Ter Is.
Coroner—Uncle Sim.
Legal Adviser—Wm. De Mott.

A procession of the players will be formed at the corner of Chicago and Rail Road streets and move promptly at 1:30 P. M. The procession will be led by a Volunteer Band, organized for the occasion. The game will be called at 2 P. M.

The following rules have been adopted:

1st. The bases being borrowed property, no players will be allowed to steal one.

2d. No muffs will be allowed on the ground; any one indulging in one will be considered a fit subject for the Coroner.

3d. Any Foul caught (if of the right sex) will be shipped to Sanford; all proceeds from the same will be applied to the Arnica fund.

4th. All flies caught shall be immediately passed to the surgeons for examination, and the fly shall be prosecuted by our Legal Adviser for any Blowing that it may do.

5th. Any player violating any of the above rules shall have his case investigated by our Legal Adviser, and if found guilty, shall have the Coroner set upon him for not less than two hours or more than one innings.

As some very brilliant playing may be expected, the audience are requested not to be too demonstrative, nor to prolong their cheers for more than 15 minutes at any one time.

P. S.—As our umpire is capable of doing all the talking necessary, it is suggested that both the audience and the players keep their mouths shut.

The ladies are cordially invited to attend.

MRS. GUMBO'S GASOLINE STOVE.

"Joshua, my dear," said Mrs. Gumbo, as she sank into her rocking chair and mopped the perspiration from her ruddy cheeks last evening, while waiting for the tea to steep for supper, "I have roasted myself to death for the last time. During all the years that I have officiated in the exalted station of mistress of your household, I have filled the role of Queen of the cook stove. The old 'Ironside' with an elevated oven, supported by two short legs in front and two long legs behind, was the first stove to see service in our family. Don't you remember, Josh, how you bought it off at an auction sale for $20.00 and gave your note for the amount payable in one year? The note was never paid, but we owned the cook-stove just the same. Two griddles were cracked and one hinge was knocked off the oven door, but nevertheless it was a splendid baker. The oven would hold six potatoes and a pie tin at the same time which answered the purpose very well when we first set up housekeeping. Those were happy days, Joshua. Old 'Ironside' was a prime baker. The bottom pie crust was never scorched nor underdone. The potatoes baked with a russet skin and a measley crumble. The biscuit would turn out exactly right in just thirty minutes. The little cookstove was a heater that is true, but I little minded the heat in those days. It gave a healthy color to my girlish cheeks which drew all the more pretty and loving words from you, Joshua. But by and by the family outgrew the little cook stove, and when one of the long legs got broken it was carted off to the foundry. The Imperial took its place. This was an elegant stove, bought on the monthly installment plan. It has rendered as good service for many years, but it is growing old and rickety now. One corner is propped up with a brick bat and the two front griddle holes are burned into one. It is wasteful of fuel, ruinous of my health and temper, and liable to vitiate our insurance policy. My mind is made up, Joshua. I shall have a new cook stove before another sun shall set, and I have decided to purchase one of the gasoline kind. There will be no wood and coal bills to pay for, no chips nor dirt, no danger of fire and no roasted Jerusha every day during the torrid season. So the first thing after breakfast to-morrow morning, Joshua, you may hie to the hardware store and purchase one of the latest style three griddle, single reservoir, gilt edged, bang-up, air tight gasoline stoves. If the fates have decided that I must pass the rest of my mortal days as chief cook and dish washer for the Gumbo family, I have decided that my toil shall be lightened and the bread shall be heightened and the teaspoons shall be brightened and the fruit cans shall be tightened, in the most approved aesthetic fashion, by the heat of a gasoline stove."

"Jerusalem, Jerusha, what in the canopy has got into your head now? Be you crazy? Be you bound to bankrupt yer poor dear Joshua? For heaven's sake, woman, take them specs off 'n jest stop 'n think. In the fust place I'm dead broke. The last two shillin' I had took me inter the circus yesterday afternoon. In the second place I can't buy no stove on tick. My natral pride wouldn't allow me to ask it. If there's any one thing a Gumbo prides bisself on more'n another its his pride. In the third place there aint no store in town what would trust me if I did ask it. I could give my note, that's true, but I've financeered so many times on that tack, that they don't ketch on no more. In the fourth place them air gasline stoves is a humbug. Why hang it, Jerusha, they don't amount to nothin'. They're finished off with fancy end legs jest like a sewin' machine. Talk about cookin', why hang it, things dont cook on 'em. The vittles jest sizzles 'n swets 'mat's all. The hull family 'll be dyin of dispeshe inside of a month. The cookin' 'll keep gettin wusser 'n wusser, and the cook 'll keep growin' crabider 'n crabider, and the young uns 'll keep growin in crosser 'n crosser, and the robustious helth of all on us 'll keep gettin poorer 'n poorer, and the doctor's bill 'll keep gittin higher 'n higher. In the fifth place gasline costs money. There aint no natral gas well on these premises. Evry pint 'o gas must be bought. Its the deerest kind 'o fuel. Wood kin be picked up along the river, and a bushel ov coal kin be diskivered onct in a while in a neighborin coal shed, but hang it, Jerusha, evry gallon 'o gas costs. There aint no way under the sun 'of economizin' on the gas bills. That air stove 'll ruin our finances; it 'll bust our bank account, and as sure as preachin it 'll carry our gray hairs down in sorrow to the grave. In the sixth place I'm opposed to buyin' the stove because you insist on't, Jerusha. By the horn-nosed, ring-tailed rhinoceros, I don't purpose to be nosed round by a petticoat. Why hang it, Jerusha, I'm the head 'o this family and I say the old cook stove's good enuff."

"Well, Mr. Gumbo," said Jerusha, as she transferred the tea pot to the table and the family sat down to supper, "your muffins and coffee will be prepared in the morning as usual, but that is the last meal I shall get in this house until a gasoline stove, all primed ready for the match, shall be stationed in the northwest corner of this kitchen. Do you hear?"

"Oh, hum! Women will be women. If a man can't have his doughnuts 'n coffee for breakfast and his taters 'n onions for dinner, and his biscuit 'n applesass for supper, life aint worth livin that's all. I'll buy the stove, Jerusha, if you'll contrive up some plan to pay for it."

The balance of the supper was eaten in silence. At its close Mr. Gumbo lighted his corncob pipe and sat down in the willow rocker to smoke, and soon slid off into the land of nod, dreaming off gas wells and gasoline stoves.

The committee to locate a site for the Soldiers' Home arrived at Brooklyn by special train on the 23rd, and were received at the depot by a committee of citizens. Mr. A. P. Cook, who had tendered 500 acres of land for the site, was also present, and all took carriages and proceeded at once to view the premises. The tract is a mile and three-quarters long, north and south, and on the west side of Vineyard Lake, with a width sufficient to make the 500 acres. The commission were evidently impressed with the beauty and attractiveness of the location. They were very observant of all points, and seemed anxious to fully understand all the advantages which this location might present. After spending all the time that daylight afforded, the commission were driven to the residence of Mr. Cook and partook of refreshments. They then took the train for Hillsdale.

Adrian Record: "Such a practical, sedate person, and so unused to trifling with hearts as Steve of the HERALD is supposed to be here in Lenawee, we wouldn't have believed it of him, had we not at Petoskey, with our own ears heard him, midst a bevy of charming young ladies artfully assert it on that those were not his best brothers that at home he had even better, and that when he was dressed quite was quite a stunning fellow—to the trifler."

Such a solid and religious citizen as Smith, of the Evening Record, is known to be here in Lenawee, who is old enough to be blessed with a charming daughter, and with the weight of years and official honors resting upon him, we wonder he has received it of him, and yet when we saw him at Traverse City with our own eyes, single handed and alone, essay the task of escorting six ladies all at once up to the insane asylum, some of who were other men's wives, we confess that our faith in editorial uprightness sustained a terrible shock.

Hudson has a "sanitorium" called Sleepy Hollow. Is that the port in which Bro. Schermerhorn anchors when overtaken by a thunder storm in a sail boat ride?

Wheat drawing's now in order.

Spencer's Gallery will be open on Wednesday and Thursday only of each week commencing Wednesday, July 29, 1885.

MY "OLD MAN."

[illegible]

THE HUMORIST'S FATE.

A Few Words of Advice to a Fond Mother.

Whose Dear, Sweet Son Is Threatened with an Attack of Humor—The Case of a Boy Who Was Saved by a Razor Strop.

[illegible]

THE HUMORIST'S BOY AND HIS UNFORTUNATE AUNT.

and tormentor of her existence was a crooked nose. Whilst the beautiful little boy sat opposite his maiden aunt at table, the conversation drifted from one thing to another until it reached potatoes, many of which, it was remarked, had that season taken the second growth.

"Pa," said the beautiful little boy with the vein of unworked humor deep down in his system, "pa, did Aunt Maria's nose take the second growth?"

The tender little jokelet fell flat with a dull, sickening thud. Nobody laughed.

On the contrary, a deep gloom was cast over the entire congregation. When the first sullen shock of the jokelet had spent itself, the father of the little boy rose up from the table, took the little boy by the collar and mechanically with a firm hand the article passing by the razor strop, strong enough to pull an unshaven stave from an empty barrel. And then there was a sound of revelry, and strife and there were woe and pain for the young boy. For days, and days thereafter he was quietest when he ate, and never a word he uttered the same gay and joyous young face, [illegible] from outside mirth.

His mother hung, was crushed with a heavy grief. [illegible] death. The fountains of his mirth were dried up, as it were, and he never laughed again.

And what is the moral?

That beautiful little boy grew to be an honored citizen. To-day he has wealth, position, influence, dyspepsia and a severe cast of countenance. He is the managing editor of a paper, and people come to him for advice, and to borrow money of him, and he never refuses to extend a helping hand, at two per cent a month, if the security is good. He was saved by a barber's razor. He was turned away from a person-controlling at his young mind was yet pliant and a barber's razor could get in its good work.

Do humorists make a great deal of money? Do they move in the most select circles of society? Dear fond mother, cast your eyes about you. Look at that young man [illegible] and grand in [illegible] the epoch. Let your gaze [illegible] for [illegible]. You do not see a [illegible] smile [illegible] sweet [illegible] debt to his washerwoman.

You must go to the humble vine-clad cottage to hear the genuine humorist in his den, as it were. There you will find him with his dignified face and fair hair cutting off some firewood, or carving the lady, or putting a half-ton of coal in his cellar, and at the same time hatching thoughts to convulse a universe, at five or six dollars a convulse. There you will see the true humorist clothed in all his glory and a pair of nail-soaped "pants."

Let me a moment longer, fond mother of a dear sweet boy. I have a friend who is accused of being a humorist, and he has been in trouble ever since the charge was made against him. Once he came to me with a countenance more than usually sad, and said:

"You do not know what a man who is charged with being a humorist has to endure. Everybody he meets expects him to have fresh and jokes constantly on hand, and they are disappointed and go behind his back and abuse him if a stream of humor isn't constantly oozing out of his mouth. If he has the jumping toothache, they will take no excuse, but stand around waiting for him to turn on a flow of humor that will make them howl like a calliope, and burst their buttons off. Why, the other day I put my note before the discounter of a bank, and they told me I'd have to work in a joke on the face of it and get a prominent citizen to write his name across the back, as an evidence of good faith, before they'd discount it. And last week a total stranger, who had heard that I was a humorist and wanted to hear a humorist talk, sought an introduction to me. After he got it, he seemed to be greatly disappointed at my flow of soul, and when I asked him to lend me ten dollars till after the next Presidential election he expressed himself, and went away with [illegible]osity. I heard afterwards that he said he was greatly surprised at my appearance, and that my conversation fell far below his expectations in idiocy and originality; that I looked like a dealer in musit collins, and my efforts to be facetious were feebledly flat and heavy. None but those who have passed through it know anything of what a person has to endure when it becomes whispered around that he is a humorist. If I could, I'd reform right now and lead a different life."

You will observe that the bark of the humorist does not ride always upon untroubled seas. He has his trials, troubles, vexations and disappointments the same as other folks. He falls down the cellar-stairs with an oleander, shuts the heavy front door upon his thumb, bets his money on the candidate that gets left, comes home to the bosom of his light-haired family with a long dark hair hanging to his coat-button, and in moments of abstraction sits down upon a coil of barbed wire fencing, and through it all he is expected to wear a smile and throw off scintillating jokes. Think you, fond mother of a dear, sweet boy, that this be easy? Alas, the official count, which is now completed, shows beyond question that it is not.

This testimony is important, coming as it does from one who has achieved wide reputation as a humorist, and it were well that you ponder it, mother of a dear, sweet boy.

You ask: "Is the humorist profession overcrowded?"

No, fond mother of a dear, sweet boy, the humorist profession is not overcrowded. There are rows and rows of empty benches up in front there, as you will notice if you let your eye meander around the synagogue. But do you observe at the door that man of lofty brow and eagle eye, armed with a stuffed club, attended by a large, healthy pup with an open countenance and a wicked eye? Well, that is the editor on guard, and woe unto him that saunteth up there with a joyous smile and bon-vivant air, and gaily asketh: "Have you ever heard the bed-tick?"—Scott Way, in Puck.

ITALIAN TEA.

The Cultivation of the Cheering Shrub in the Italian Peninsula.

The French Consul at Naples gives an interesting account in his last report of the attempts which have been made to acclimatize the tea plant in Italy. The first is said to have been made by the English during their occupation of Sicily at the beginning of the century, when the plant reached a height of six feet in the open air. There is no proof, however, that any crop was obtained, and no further attempt seems to have been made until 1871, when some seeds were sown at Caltanisetta, which is in much the same attitude as Jamascioro (in Japan), from which place they were brought. The seeds never sprouted, and a fresh trial made in 1875 with another variety, the Thea sinensis, also proved a failure. The Government, however, which had taken up the question, was not discouraged, and after weighing the various opinions which it had elicited, made several fresh plantations of Thea sinensis in the zone comprised between Florence, Naples and Sicily. These plantations also came to nothing, but Signor d'Amico, a landed proprietor in the province of Messina, was able to exhibit, at the agricultural show held at Messina in 1882, more than a hundred plants of the Thea sinensis three years old, which had been grown in the open. Prof. Beccari, too, who has been to India for the purpose of investigating the growth of tea, is of opinion that there is no reason why it should not succeed in Italy if the plants and the seed are brought from a climate similar to that of the peninsula; for the fact of its growing in the open along the Riviera, upon the shores of Lago Maggiore and at Florence proves that it is to a certain extent a hardy plant. If it has not been more generally grown in Italy hitherto, this is, Prof. Beccari thinks, because the mode of cultivation has been all wrong. The Italians have thought that the plant wanted shade, whereas in India and China it is grown in very open ground and upon a soil which contains a large proportion of sand and oxide of iron. He recommends, therefore, that it should be planted in land not too dry, and in a soil preserving enough moisture to aliment the plants, such as the olive-growing fields of the Riviera, the Maremma and Southern Italy, and that the plants should be brought from the coldest provinces of Japan. The Italian Minister of Agriculture has determined to act upon Professor Beccari's report, and has already sent a large order to Japan, besides buying a number of plants from a landed proprietor at Pallanza, in the province of Novara, who has met with a fair amount of success in his experiments.—London Times.

—The late Earl of Dudley, who died suddenly last Thursday, had his life insured in various British companies for $1,500,000 for the benefit of Lady Dudley, and this amount, added to the dower secured to her by her marriage settlement, makes her one of the richest women in England.

—One of the most attractive objects exhibited at Turin during the late Exposition was a burgh of the mediæval age, together with its little town, constructed with the most painstaking fidelity; all the building and rooms were, down to the smallest details, constructed according to historical account, and exhibited domestic life and trades of the Fifteenth Century.

It is generally conceded that Russia possesses more precious stones than any other nation, a majority of which we procured at the expense of blood. —One day a Munich nurse put her charge down on the grass for a short time. Suddenly a great eagle came swooping down and attacked the babe. In an instant the nurse threw her shawl at the bird. It fortunately went over his head, so it not only prevented his seeing the child, but stopped his flying away. The nurse then caught hold of him, and clung to him with the shawl tight over his head until some one came to help her. When the King heard the story he sent her a handsome present, and ordered the bird to be kept in the menagerie.—Continental Times.

PECULATION IN RUSSIA.

The Depredations Which Have Honeycombed Every Branch of the Public Service.

The exploits of the Russian commissariat are well known, even abroad. In all this there is nothing very new. That which most concerns us is to trace the relationship existing between the general system and the primary causes of the depredations which, whenever a war takes place, recur as inevitably as if they were operations of nature, and with all the regularity of the seasons. It is all very well to inveigh against Gorvitz, Varshavsky, Prince Urossoff and their 225 accomplices. But are they the only culpables? Why do such iniquities as theirs never occur in other armies? If contractors, in their greed of gain, deliver rations and stores of bad quality, why are they accepted as good? This is evidently the crux of the question. According to the prescriptions of the military code all articles of food and medicine delivered by a contractor have to be examined by a surgeon or a medical commission and the commandant of the corps for which they are destined—or nominees acting under his orders. Hence, without the connivance of all these people fraud would be impossible. If the contractors cheat, the brave commandant and the erudite doctors must do likewise from high to low. Not a man who went through the Bulgarian campaign would deny that this was precisely the case. On the other hand, there are always to be found in our official spheres, corrupt though they be, some men who, untainted with dishonesty, are eager to redress the wrongs which they see around them—such, for instance, as General Tcherkassoff, a military inspector. At the beginning of the campaign this officer presented to the commander-in-chief a voluminous work, in the shape of a report, in which he had collected and set forth and proved by a mass of facts, recent and palpable, the flagrant malversations and frauds of the Gorvitz Company and consorts.

This report, though an historical document of high value, has not yet seen the light. It was stifled by secret confederates of the implicated parties. These confederates were of all ranks, says the correspondent of the Noroc Vremya in his covert language. Some interrupted the reading of the report by jocular remarks which distracted attention, others protested against it as ill-timed, and, encountered everywhere with either opposition or indifference, it remained in the shade, and while the war lasted the company continued their depredations without let or hindrance. The gentlemen of the commissariat were thus not the only ones who had their fingers in the pie. War is an Eldorado for all who keep to the wall side of the road. During the trial of Rykoff, the notorious manager of the bank of Skopine, of which I gave an account some time ago in the columns of the Times, it came out in 1877 the establishment had a considerable increase in its deposits, which came in great part from the seat of war, being lodged at high interest by officers of the commissariat and their worthy accomplices of the military branch of the service. Another characteristic fact which transpired in the course of the trial was that when Rykoff became bankrupt, the majority of those clients declined to rank as creditors, fearing doubtless that if they did so they would be compelled to reveal the shameful secret of their ill-gotten wealth.—"Stepniak" in London Times.

TWO NOTED BATTLES.

The Capture of Vicksburg and the Battle of the Wilderness.

"The Vicksburg newspaper, which we received regularly while before Vicksburg, through the courtesy of the rebel pickets, said prior to the 4th, in speaking of a Yankee boast that they would take dinner in Vicksburg that day, that the best receipt for cooking a rabbit was, 'catch your rabbit first.' The paper at this time, and for some time previous, was printed on the plain side of wall paper. The last number was printed on the 4th, and announced that we had caught our rabbit.

"I have no doubt that Pemberton commenced his correspondence on the 3d with a two-fold purpose: First to avoid an assault which he knew would be successful; and second to prevent the capture taking place on the great national holiday, the anniversary of the Declaration of American Independence. Holding out for better terms, as he did, he defeated his aim in the latter particular. On the Fourth of July, at the appointed hour, the garrison of Vicksburg marched out of their works and formed a line in front, stacked arms and marched back in good order. Our whole army present witnessed this scene without cheering, and without a single offensive remark that I ever heard of. Logan's division, which had approached nearest the rebel works, was the first to march in, and the flag of one of the regiments of that division was soon floating over the Court-house."

Of the Wilderness campaign the General says: "Operating as we were in an enemy's country, and supplied always from a distant base, large detachments had at all times to be sent from the front, not only to guard the base of supplies and the roads leading to it, but all the roads leading to our flanks and rear. We were also operating in a country unknown to us and without competent guides or maps showing the roads accurately. Estimating Lee's strength in the same manner as ours, the enemy had not less than 80,000 men at the start. Reinforcements during the campaign were about equal to ours, deducting our discharged men and those sent back. Lee was on the defensive, and in a country in which every stream, every road, every obstacle to the movement of troops, and every natural defense was familiar to him and his army. The citizens were all friendly to him and his cause, and could and did furnish him with accurate reports of our every movement. Rear guards were not necessary for him, and having always a railroad at his back, large wagon trains were not required. All circumstances considered, we did not have any advantage of numbers.

"On the morning of the 7th we sent out pickets and skirmishers along our entire front to discover the position of the enemy. Some went as far as a mile and a half before finding him. But Lee showed no disposition to come out. There was no battle during the day, and but little firing, except in Warren's front. About midday Warren was directed to make a reconnoissance in force. This drew some sharp firing, but there was no attempt on the part of the rebels to drive him back. This ended the battle of the Wilderness.

"More severe fighting has not been witnessed on this continent than that of the 5th and 6th of May, 1864. Our victory consisted in having successfully crossed a formidable stream almost in the face of the enemy, and in getting the army together afterward as a unit. We gained an advantage on the morning of the 6th, which, if it had been followed up, must have proved very decisive. In the evening the enemy gained an advantage, but was repulsed. As we stood at the close, the two armies were relatively in about the same condition to meet each other as when the river had divided them. But the fact of safely crossing was a victory. Our losses in the battle of the Wilderness were 2,261 killed, 8,785 wounded, and 2,902 missing, probably nearly all the latter captured by the enemy."—General Grant's Personal Memoirs.

The London Ragamuffin.

The genuine ragamuffin will never complain. He never expects or even hopes that his condition will improve; he is as much a fatalist as the Turk. I once asked an interesting little boy with a pale, careworn face and an intelligent express on, if he had ever wondered why it was that he had nothing but rags, why it was he had no boots, and sometimes no bread to eat, while I had plenty of everything? He looked up at me with a calm, patient express on, as much as to say, "I have never wondered at such things." "Tell me," I persisted, "have you ever thought about this difference?" "It's the Lord's will," he replied tritely; but he seemed reluctant, when I pressed him, to explain what he understood by the Lord's will. At last in a timid, hurried voice he said: "It is all the Lord's doing, this way: you are grand like, and dress nice, and lives in a big house, and you have a pianner, and—and," he looked round the room that he might enumerate all our titles to consideration—"and a sofy; so the Lord sees as how you are gentlefolks, and He think lots of such like as you. But we are very poor, we are. Mother pawns the blankets, and father beats mother, and swears awful. We ain't got no Sunday things; we're all raggety, so the Lord don't take much notice on us."—English Illustrated Magazine.

The American Eagle.

There are several varieties of eagles in the United States, but not all that are commonly called by different names are entitled to the separate distinction. The largest is Audubon's "Bird of Washington," or Washington Eagle, a huge bird that has apparently been seen by few persons but the great naturalist himself, and which inhabits the region of the Great Lakes and the Upper Mississippi. Its spread of wings is over ten feet. It rarely comes to New England; but Dr. Wood, the Connecticut ornithologist, in his "Birds of Connecticut," describes one that was caught in a steel trap, in the East Windsor meadows, just after a Connecticut river freshet had left thousands of dead fish on land. On these he was feasting, in company with two "Bald Eagles," whom he greatly surpassed in size. He was killed, as was supposed, after being caught, by a blow on the head with a club; but he recovered on being thrown upon the grass, and flew away. He was nearly four feet long, and his spread of wings was ten feet. The "national bird" of our country is the so-called (improperly so-called) Bald Eagle—a bird whose head is as well supplied, proportionately, with feathers as any part of his body; but on the head these are white, while the rest of the bird, except the neck and tail, is quite dark. The female (who is always the largest, in birds of prey), often measures three feet four inches in length, with a stretch of wings between seven and eight feet. It is incorrectly described in our cyclopædias as the "largest of the fishing or sea eagles." To say nothing of Audubon's great bird, there is in Greenland (and in some parts of Europe) a sea eagle a little larger than the bald species. The bald eagle (not uncommon here) builds on cliffs and great trees a nest of coarse sticks, which is used by the same pair, if undisturbed, for very many years (they will live to the age of 120 or 140 years), and in this latitude they lay their eggs after the middle of January, and hatch out about the middle of February. The diversity of color between the young and the adults occasions mistakes in naming them, and leads to the idea that they are "sea eagles," "black eagles," "gray eagles," etc. Doctor Franklin objected to the adoption of the eagle as our national bird, because of its predatory habits, and suggested the turkey instead. The golden eagle (which may be the kind that was shot near Riverton, and if so, it is a rare and valuable bird for ornithologists) is seldom seen in Connecticut. It is a magnificent bird, belonging in Europe as well as the United States, is about as large as the bald eagle.

Young Lady at Boarding School

At some of the French boarding schools in Paris, the girls are fed on weak soup, two or three degrees stronger than hot water; meat from which nearly all the nourishment is extracted by boiling; coarse veal, watery carrots and gray, sour bread. The young lady who comes home after a few terms of this sort of diet may be very learned, but is pale and poor looking, lacking vigor and health. Give her Brown's Iron Bitters—the best tonic in the world for young ladies with impoverished blood—and bring roses into her cheeks.

About 9 o'clock last night a horrible fatal accident occurred near Springwells station, where a conductor, named Sydney A. Rood, met with instantaneous death. He came in on train No. 32 of the Michigan Central Railroad which he left at the station, and at the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern crossing boarded a train which was being made up to be transferred at the railroad slip. He walked on top of the train and accidentally fell between the cars in such a manner that he was thrown between the tracks. The train consisting of thirty cars, passed over him and when found he was crushed into an unrecognizable mass. His head was cut off and his body literally reduced to small pieces. The right foot was severed from the body, and both arms were jerked from their sockets. The left one was cut in three pieces. The unfortunate man was disemboweled and his body presented a most frightful appearance to spectator. The fragments were gathered up and word sent to the city of the accident. The police notified Coroner Keefe, who impaneled a jury and adjourned the inquest until Wednesday afternoon. —Detroit Free Press.

The deceased was a son-in-law of B. G. Woodward, who received news of the accident Tuesday morning and started immediately for Detroit. Mr. Rood was 35 years of age and leaves a wife and one child.

"The Re-Union," a book of 55 pages, containing a full account of the late reunion of the Clinton High School pupils of twenty-five years ago,—letters of regret, addresses, essays, poem, register of those present, list of deceased, etc.,—is now ready. Copies sent on receipt of 25 cents each, to help defray the cost, (small editions being very expensive.) Address, Mrs. A. B. VanDeMark, Chairman of Committee, Clinton, Mich.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

The cold wave struck this section Monday.

The hardest rain of the season came Sunday evening, flooding everything.

Corn and oats were blown down very bad Sunday evening during the rain storm.

Rev. and Mrs. W. J. Clack and Dr. and Mrs. R. H. Nelson were at Detroit on Thursday last.

Harry Smith spent a few days with friends in Wallaceburg, Canada.

Quite a good many rusticated at Sand and Wampler's Lake Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and report a fine time.

Wm. H. Arner is sick again. This time he has to keep his bed. It is hoped with good care and careful attention of the attending physician, Dr. C. M. Woodward, of Tecumseh, he will be able to be about again soon.

Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Mills were the guests of W. R. Wilson over Sunday.

A. R. Arner called on agent Frank Allen and wife at Richland last week, and says they are as happy as can be in their new home. Success is our wishes to the young couple.

Mrs. Chas. Clark and daughter Hattie who have been visiting friends here for the past few weeks returned to their home in Elkhart Monday.

Mrs. Burtis Bird, of Tecumseh, visited Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Rappleye on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mrs. Sarah and Master Lawrence Rappleye visited friends in Dundee from Saturday until Tuesday.

Miss Florence French, of Adrian, spent a few days with her friend, Mrs. Chas. Gove, last week.

Quite a good many from here attended the ice cream festival given by the band boys on Wm. Britton's lawn, at Britton, on Friday evening. The Blissfield band was in attendance and furnished some very fine music.

Friday afternoon the boys of the village went to Holloway and played a friendly game of ball with the boys of that place. Our boys have not played for two or three years so they got left bad. The score stood Ridgeway 9 innings and 6 tallies, Holloway 8 innings 24 tallies. They enjoyed the game very much, and desire to extend a vote of thanks to the Holloway boys for the gentlemanly manner in which they were entertained while there.

BROOKLYN BALLAST.

Saturday was picnic day for Jefferson and Windle Sabbath schools. Four horse wagons crowded with boys and girls, double and single rigs of all styles, set off with evergreens and banners made a fine picture as they went towards Wampler's lake.

The summer resorts have become villages that send us many visitors, but somebody besides Rob Morris will deal out candy and cure all for the colds they catch hereafter. He has secured a high seat in a large drug store at Buffalo, and bids us good bye.

Mrs. P. Holden treated her friends to a flower panorama Friday evening, and a large number watched the unfolding of a night blooming cereus bud. It was a dream that materialized waxen white; but like any other air castle it had collapsed at day light.

Except the above happenings little to further the worlds best interests has made the week memorable, unless it be the pillar of fire directly overhead. Many people did not attempt to work, and some who did repented as soon as they regained sense. Those who held down boxes under awnings and berated civil service, low prices and Cleveland times generally escaped being sunstruck: the others tumbled to the racket in all sorts of absurd places, and are practically unfitted for argueing the work muddle. The non political part of community can do nothing to comfort them, and all advices to unravel their knitting work is rejected. The grand botch exterminator invented by our grandmothers would be a too disagreeable air brake for tariff ills by half.

ONSTED ODDS.

We had a bountiful supply of moisture in the shape of rain, Saturday, Sunday and Monday, followed by cooler weather.

Our pastor last Sunday gave a severe sermon against the Sunday excursions to Devil's lake from Toledo, and this week a petition to the high officials of the M. & O. R. R. to stop the aforesaid excursions is being circulated.

As Mr. Chas. Reed was passing out of Dr. Ross' yard he noticed a turtle in the path. At first there seemed to be nothing different about it from others of the same family, but on closer inspection he noticed a roughness of the shell which proved to be an inscription viz: S. M. Y. 1871. The doctor cut his initials and the present year under the other and the turtle went tramping on. We should be pleased to know who S. M. Y. is.

David Sickner has improved the appearance of his house by putting in new windows.

Onsted & Wemple are getting lots of wheat at 85 cents per bu. They ship two cars to-day.

At present there is some talk of Al Howard moving his mill to Onsted, and increasing the business of the mill from sawing to planing, matching, etc., and still continue to make brick and tile. We hope he will do the same.

This seems to be the season for tramps; every day brings us samples, rare specimens. Yesterday four stopped here for refreshments, and one who was under the observation of your correspondent seemed to have a dilatable stomach by the way he ate at two different houses.

BAND FESTIVAL AT MONROE.

The band tournament to be held at Monroe on Aug. 20th promises to be a grand affair. We understand that the Tecumseh band are making arrangements to attend. The Monroe Commercial says of it:

It is less than a week since invitations were sent to the various bands of surrounding cities and villages to come to Monroe Aug. 20 and participate in the 25th anniversary of the Monroe Cornet band, and the acceptances are pouring in at so rapid a rate as to exceed the most sanguine expectations of the band boys.

The various railroads will carry visitors at half fare, and excursions have already been arranged to this city from Plymouth, Wayne, Ann Arbor, Manchester and Tecumseh. If the citizens contribute liberally enough the attendance of several military companies can be secured, which, with the various G. A. R. posts of the county and neighboring cities, will present the grandest parade ever witnessed in this part of the state. The same date having been fixed as the fifth reunion of the soldiers and sailors' association of this county, in which such crack posts as Fairbanks and Farquar posts of Detroit, Forsyth post of Toledo, and others equally well known, will take a part. We have the assurance that at least one thousand warworn heroes will be in the line of parade that day, each post headed by a band.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Stephen Noole died at her home in Hillsdale on Tuesday evening July 28th. The deceased was known to many of our old residents as Miss Sarah Whitehead, daughter of A. A. Whitehead, whose family lived in Tecumseh many years ago. They moved from here to LaPorte in 1852. Her father died eight years ago and her mother only two years since, both of whom found a final burial place in Tecumseh cemetery. Mrs. Noble's remains were brought here last Thursday and interred by the side of her parents. The deceased was a niece of Mr. J. D. Sholes' first wife. She was twice married. Her first husband was killed at Pittsburg Landing, and her present husband, Mr. Noble, survives her. But two members of the Whitehead family remain, William living at Eaton Rapids and Sumner who resides at Jersey City.

The Universalist church of Manchester will hold a basket grove meeting in Lyman Baldwin's grove next Sunday, Aug. 9. Services at 11 A. M. and 3 P. M.

ONE DAY'S OUTING.

One day last week was set aside for a trip through the country with a horse and buggy. The weather was fearfully hot, but as there was a fine breeze stirring, it was far more comfortable than sweltering behind plate glass. Northward the star of empire took its way on this occasion.

Our first halt was made at Wm. Silver's on the Clinton road. He now works the old farm which gives him enough to do. He has lately been remodeling the interior of his house and papering over his rooms, which makes him a most comfortable home.

Henry Lancaster has been painting over the exterior of his Hotel which greatly improves its appearance. Hank is always making improvements of some kind.

E. F. Muir is running the old meat market and grocery business. He reports business good and seems to be as good natured as ever.

James B. Hause was found in the furniture store. He had no reason to complain of trade in his line but seemed inclined to criticise the weather somewhat.

Made Bro. Miles a short call at the Local Office and found Charley Spafford freezing a freezer of ice cream.

S. F. Marstellar is having a good run of work this summer. He is putting up some fine monuments and headstones at Clinton, Tecumseh and other places.

Dr. Cameron is having a good ride now and is well pleased with the healthy growth of his practice during the past six months.

Wm. J. Kelly is at work for Semark this summer and is engaged at present on the repairs to the Chas. Brook's residence.

John Ed. McCollum again has his business in his own hands—much to his own satisfaction as well as that of his friends—and is stocking up preparatory to a good fall's trade.

Found W. S. Kimball at his old station in the office of the Woolen Mills. The mill is now running a partial complement of hands and is increasing the number every week. A large lot of new cloths is now in stock and two men will start on the road this week.

John J. White has his hands full fitting new suits and always gives a good fit.

David Woodward was found at the foundry. He has put the price of plows down to hard pan, and is having a big run on them.

Gus VanDeMark is at the old hardware store and reports business picking up. He looks for a good fall trade.

Geo. Freese is home from Detroit for a few days and can be found at his father's store. He expects to return to Detroit this fall.

C. S. Burroughs is giving Clinton a first class drug store, and judging from his trade, we should say that his efforts in this direction are appreciated.

Clinton is in a ferment at present over the postoffice. Postmaster Rose has resigned and the two candidates for the vacancy are Danforth Keyes and J. B. McAdam. No fellow can find out just at present which one will be the lucky man.

Geo. R. Wilson still lives and moves and has his being on the old farm west of Clinton. He is living with his son who runs the farm. He considers that his working days are about over.

Found Wm. A. Marshall drawing in wheat with three teams. He had only time to say, How d'ye do and Good day.

Jos. Spaulding had a fine crop of wheat already secured and was plowing for the new seeding. He has a fine lot of porkers which will soon be ready for the market.

Wm. E. Wisner now farms about 140 acres. He had a fine crop of wheat this year. He is getting the lumber on the ground for a new house which will be erected next season.

Peter Gragg works the old homestead farm in the west part of Clinton township. His father has retired from active duty but still lives on the place and seems to enjoy life.

George Goodrich was hauling wheat with one set of hands and harvesting the golding grain with another set during our stay, which was short.

Wesley Keyser is now running his own farm and also the Coryell place, making two hundred and forty acres in all which he has charge of. It is needless to say that he has plenty to do, at least during the summer months, to keep him out of mischief.

Seth Sheldon has been "slicking up" and improving the Clark farm very much since his residence upon it. Under his skillful management it is developing into one of the best farms in that section of the county.

Sylvia's Guardian;

—OR—

A YOUNG GIRL'S LOVE.

BY BETTY WINWOOD.

"You would never do that, Isabel?"

"Yes, a thousand times rather than fail of making my peace with you. The last vestige of pride has been stricken from my heart."

She made a movement as though to fall at his feet, but he held her in both hands.

"Not that," he cried, half vexedly that.

"Then you forgive me that all this sorrow."

"It is."

"And you will try to forget how foolish and pettyminded I have been?"

"Yes, Isabel."

She would not suffer him to continue. "Enough. We will both forget the past. Bury it out of sight and write over the grave, 'all bygones.' Let us begin again. Is it a bargain?"

"Yes, Isabel. But really there is something I—I—"

"No, there isn't, [illegible] kissing him again. "I deserve a hard word. You have been the master in this affair. I the [illegible]. The humiliation should be mine."

Then she caught his hand, and laid it caressingly against her cheek.

"It is like a beautiful dream to be back again, Mark," she softly murmured. "I feel that I never wish to wake from it. It would have been my death-blow had you received me coldly."

How could he speak after such a confession? The world dwindled to a speck. It would have been easier to plunge a knife into the warm, throbbing heart fluttering so near his own.

At length Isabel released herself. "I had no intention of getting up a scene," she said, blushing prettily. "I must run away this moment. Where is Aunt Margaret? Let me go to her."

Just as she was saying this a dainty, girlish figure trimmed a rose the lawn, under the window, singing a snatch of bird-like melody. Isabel drew a quick breath.

"Who is that?"

"My ward, Sylvia Dreme."

"Is she living at Ingleside?"

"Yes," Mark answered. "The poor child is an orphan. She has no other home."

This was his opportunity to confess the truth. Why did he not? Was it distrust of himself or sympathy for Isabel that kept him silent?

"An orphan! How very sad," she exclaimed, with irresistible sweetness. "We will be very kind to her, Mark, and make good, so far as possible, the places of those she has lost."

Mark scoled himself in after Isabel left him, and so it happened that the three whose lives had been so unexpectedly blended did not all meet until the dinner-hour.

Sylvia appeared, radiant with happiness. She did not know of Isabel's presence in the house, until they stood face to face in Mark Castleton's presence, with the width of the dinner-table between them.

A confused presentation followed. Sylvia could never afterward remember what responses she made to the remarks delivered in Miss Grier's even, musical tones. On catching the name she felt all the color die out of her beautiful face.

"What a brilliant beauty," she thought. "How could Mark help loving her? Of course, her quarrel is made up, or she would not be here."

Finally, she stole a glance at her lover. His pallor and constraint were only too perceptible. He looked wretched almost beside himself. It required an effort to utter the most commonplace courtesies.

For Sylvia felt a sudden suspension that almost stilled the beating of her heart.

"Mark's love has returned to its old allegiance," she told herself. "It was mere sympathy that drew him to me, and now that Isabel is back again he realizes the mistake he has made. No matter. I am very miserable myself, but I could not endure to see him unhappy."

The moment dinner was over Mark returned to the library, and shut himself in. The next morning one of the servants announced that his master had left Ingleside during the night, to be absent several days.

It was true. Unable to meet the dilemma in which he found himself placed, he had fled like a coward, trusting that Isabel would hear the truth from other lips than his, during his absence, and understand her true position. Besides, was he sure, quite sure in his own heart, which of the two he loved best?

Isabel's manner to Sylvia was winning and gracious. In spite of it, the latter avoided her. She could no more have helped the instinctive distrust and dislike that awoke in her heart than she could have changed the course of the sun.

The afternoon of the third day Isabel sent a message to Sylvia in her chamber. "Will you come out with me for a walk? I wish to see you alone."

The girl went. Isabel was slightly pale as they turned into a shaded path at some distance from the house. She had the air of one who had nerved herself for a trying ordeal.

"I wish to tell you something of myself, Sylvia," she said, pausing abruptly beside a murmuring fountain. "You are willing to listen?"

"O, yes."

"Perhaps you have heard my story already?" turning a keen glance upon the girl's changing face. "Aunt Margaret knows. She may have told you of my hopes and dreams. It would be a dreadful disappointment should any thing come between them and fruition—dreadful."

Sylvia made no response. She put out her hand involuntarily, clinging to the marble basin for support.

"Mark Castleton was my promised husband long before you ever knew him," she went on, speaking rapidly. "A foolish misunderstanding separated us for a season. But, now that I am back again, he loves me better than ever. Have you not seen it?"

A single monosyllable fell from Sylvia's parted lips:

"Yes."

"You must know, also, what he is suffering at this moment. You are breaking his heart and mine! Some foolish words, spoken to you under the impulse of the moment, are all that keeps us apart. O, how can you stand between us and happiness?"

Sylvia made an effort to control herself, but her voice sounded strangely husky as she said:

"You think I should go away?"

"Yes, yes. It would be better for us all. You will be doing Mark a favor by leaving Ingleside before he returns."

[illegible] eager, imploring tone. "In a month's time he will have forgotten all about you."

Just then a step sounded on the gravel. Isabel turned, uttering a sharp cry of [illegible]. A tall, handsome man with [illegible] complexion and bold, piercing eyes was coming toward them.

[illegible] Sylvia's step. A glad light [illegible] and he eagerly extended both hands in greeting.

Isabel [illegible] Castleton, with the strange face. Well, [illegible] the mine in which I had staked my fortune have proved an utter failure?"

Isabel drew a deep breath.

"Everything gone—your fortune, all?"

"Everything."

There was a spence, Isabel saw, [illegible] her brow [illegible], a shadow [illegible] her face.

"What a mistake it [illegible] pressed [illegible] another word.

Sylvia was shocked. Scarcely knowing what she was doing, she clasped Mr. Castleton's hand between both her own.

"I am very sorry," she murmured. "It is so dreadful now for you. I—I—"

The sweet voice faltered, suddenly bursting into tears, she rushed from the room.

She went down to breakfast the next morning later than usual. Mr. Castleton and Mrs. Dalton were both present—only Isabel's place was vacant. After a brief delay, one of the servants was sent to summon her. The girl came back frightened.

"Miss Grier is not in her room," she announced. "I am sure she has left the house. This note was lying on the dressing-case. It is addressed to you, sir."

Mark took it silently. He did not seem to hear Mrs. Dalton's startled exclamations. Breaking the seal, he swept his eyes swiftly over the few hurriedly-written lines it contained. Sylvia saw his face change. After waiting a moment, he laid the note on the table beside her.

"I wish you to read it," he said, in a low voice.

She did so. This is what it said:

"A life of poverty would not be agreeable to me, and I claim my release. Manuel Kerston is my lover—not Sylvia's, as I gave you to understand. Though not a rich man, he has a settled income of a few thousand a year, and—I love him! Yes, the secret is out—I love him! We would have been married abroad had not the glittering temptation your fortune afforded brought me home again. Now that it is lost, I had better be true to the promptings of my heart. Even before these lines meet your gaze I shall be Manuel Kerston's wife.

ISABEL."

The note fell from Sylvia's trembling fingers. For a moment she forgot her own sorrow, and could only think of Mr. Castleton's.

"Heaven help you!" she whispered. "How are you going to endure this double blow?"

Mark had lost color, but a smile was on his lips. Rising suddenly, he drew the girl into the nearest room, and shut the door.

"Let me tell you, Sylvia, what that—that woman said to me the day I returned home. She was walking in the grounds with a stranger, but dismissed him the moment she saw me, and came to meet me. That is Sylvia's lover," her lying lips faltered. "She used to meet him secretly at the seminary, and now he has come here. She covets your wealth, but her heart is his. I think she will end the struggle by resigning you." I believed her. Your own words, when you came to me afterward in the library, seemed to confirm the story."

There was a pause. Something in his gaze as he bent over her caused Sylvia suddenly to exclaim:

"O, Mark, tell me the truth! Is it possible that you love me, and not Isabel? Me?"

"With all my heart," he whispered, touching his lips to her forehead. "I never knew how passionately until I thought you were lost to me forever."

They were married, of course, and were "happy ever after." And Dame Fortune had not played Mark the shabby trick he imagined. It proved a false alarm in regard to the worthlessness of the missing stock in which he had invested, for he was a richer man than ever. Rich in worldly goods, but richer still in heaven-sent happiness.

Never Give Up.

If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow; you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease, and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by C. A. Wright & Co.

Taken together, all the beauties of art and nature do not interest the inquisitive female so much as the view she gets through the key hole.

"Thick as leaves in Vallambrosa." This phrase was no doubt first applied to the testimonials of Mishler's Herb Bitters, for they really seem countless. F. Hoffman, of Circleville, Ohio, sends along his contribution: "This is to certify that I have had dumb ague, and by using one bottle of Mishler's Herb Bitters a complete cure has been effected."

The colored women of Mobile have organized an art association.

"Oh! Cast that Shadow from thy Brow."

You can't do it if you have liver complaint or dyspepsia. The darkened countenance tells the story of inward commotion and woe. Clear your stomach, strengthen your digestion, regulate your liver, tone your nerves, and then away goes the shadow from your brow, and you are happy because you are well. Mrs. M. J. Alston, of Littleton, N. C., says, "I recommend Brown's Iron Bitters to the nervous and debilitated. It greatly benefited me."

A metal hitherto unknown, and which is said to be likely to supplant nickel in general use, has been discovered in the Lehigh Valley.

The Homliest Man in Tecumseh.

As well as the handsomest, and others, are invited to call on Baker & Hall, and get free a trial bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the throat and Lungs, a remedy that is selling entirely upon its merits and is guaranteed to cure and relieve all Chronic and Acute Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis, and Consumption. Price 50 cents and $1.

FACTS FOR FARMERS.

The experiment of churning each cow's milk separately has shown that cows that give a small yield in quantity of milk often produce a larger proportion of butter than the copious milkers. This is true not only of different breeds, but different animals of the same breed. —San Francisco Chronicle.

—Farmers like to see the wheat field well covered when the snow goes off in the spring. But if the soil is rich and the wheat is encouraged to grow by cultivating the surface a little, grain is better, as it is not likely to break down. Some of the best wheat fields have in spring looked so bare of wheat that their owners were tempted to plough them up, but a large crop was the outcome at harvest.—Rural Home.

—That hen-lay better when divided into small flocks has with me been demonstrated. In one flock were nineteen hens, and in another four, the former receiving much better care and food than the latter, and having better quarters. The highest number received from the smaller flock in one day was four, and from the larger flock thirteen, and the average products of the two flocks have borne about the same ratio. —N. Y. Tribune.

—An evergreen tree trimmed up a few feet from the bottom is an intolerable offense to good taste. A hay-cock on a bean-pole would be a reputable substitute. An evergreen should be a pyramid springing from the ground, or it should be a thing. No class of trees add more to a landscape than evergreens when properly grown, and no trees so disfigure it when turned into inverted tops. An evergreen is at its best when it is a "part of the lawn," so closely connected with the sward as to be distinguished only by its color.—Rural New Yorker.

—The Poultry Monthly gives the results of some experiments made to test the effect different conditions as to moisture would have upon the hatching of eggs. Ten hens were set on one hundred and thirty eggs in a basement and the damp ground, with just enough straw to hold the eggs together; ten other hens were set on the upper floor on one hundred and thirty eggs with only straw enough to keep the eggs from breaking. The result was almost exactly one hundred chicks from each lot of hens. So it concludes that with good eggs the surroundings make but little difference.

—Oats are a profitable and useful crop and will succeed upon almost any soil from black loam to the heaviest clay. They are grown so easily that they are hardly appreciated. Oats grown in a northern latitude are much heavier than those grown further south, and hence seed should be obtained that has been grown at the north. Heavy oats are somewhat scarce. No farmer ever had more oats than he knew what to do with. They are an excellent feed for horses, sheep, fowls, or, in fact, for any animal. The later oats are sown the lighter they will be likely to be. Upon old, previously cultivated land but little labor is required.—Chicago Times.

GLOVES AND FOOTGEAR.

The Fashionable Vanity of Women with Respect to Hand and Foot Covering.

Traveling mantles which made the shape of a visite are long and with large sleeves, redingotes and pelisses fit tight and have many plaits or gathers at the back, a band or string put on in the inside draws in the waist, and they are buttoned the whole length. Thin materials are employed for such mantles, although they are intended to protect the costume from dust, rain and other accidents on the way.

The toilet of a woman belonging to the fashionable and elegant world must be distinguished by the most careful attention to details, and it is necessary to devote a few lines to the question of gloves and footgear. With a dressy toilet Swedish gloves continue the only handgear considered suitable; with a white robe white chevrette may be worn, and the fine doe glove with white embroidered points, always very long and buttoned upward from the wrist, is worn for the street, shopping, etc. There are also elegant silk and kid gloves with long lace gauntlets worked in gold and silver thread and silks of different colors, yet these are so difficult to choose in harmony with the toilet that a little more license is allowed.

Elegant shoes for wearing with outdoor costumes are of fine kid, either black or matching the dress, and no ornament is put on. We would here advise our young friends not to have their shoes and walking boots with such long points as are fashionable, for these press the toes in an atrocious manner and cause many inconveniences. One must ever deplore the mania for change always going on in the world, which throws us from one extreme to the other; it would be so easy, for instance, to wear foot gear of a sensible and yet elegant shape, instead of the horribly outre points now so admired, but of course the latter are all the rage. So much for fashion! Those, however, are much to be pitied who allow the fair and fickle Dame to dictate to them in every respect instead of following the rules of good sense and good taste, when by doing the latter they would not only gain esteem in the eyes of all well-bred people, but also be well and elegantly attired.—The Sea son.

CUTLERY.

American Goods—How the Different Kinds of Cutlery Are Made.

American cutlery is now finding its way all over the world, and knives, shears, scythes and planes of our manufacture are to be found in the warehouses of most large English cities. In 187[illegible] the importation of cutlery into the United States amounted to $10,500,000, which was cut down in 1880 to about $900,000 a year, besides which $[illegible] worth of domestic goods were exported in that year. In the manufacture of axes the United States has made marvelous advances, surpassing all other countries except Canada, which bears an equally good reputation for making these useful implements.

Good table-knives are made of steel and iron welded together; the part which goes into the handle (called in technicality the tang in England) and the shoulder are of iron, and the blade of steel. The tang and shoulder are forged from bar iron, and the blade from shear or cast-steel. Knife-blades, razor-blades and other small articles are usually forged into their required shape while still attached to the bar, which serves for the workman to hold them by. When the bar becomes too short it is grasped in a pair of tongs held close by a ring which clamps them by sliding up their conical handles. Two men are employed in forging such work. The principal workman, or fireman, as he is sometimes called, uses a small hammer of two to four pounds weight, while the hammerman wields the sledge-hammer, weighing from ten to fifteen pounds. The fireman, who attends the heating as well as the anvil work, directs the hammerman, whose blows merely follow those of the small directing hammer of the fireman. In drawing down or reducing a bar both in length and width, the flat face of the hammer is used, but when the length or breadth alone is to be extended, only the narrow edge of the hammer is used. The concavity of razor-blades is made by hammering the blade on a small round-faced anvil; the notch, or nail-hole, of a penknife is struck by means of a chisel of the required form. Superior work, such as razor-blades, are "smithed" after forging, that is, beaten upon an anvil, to condense the metal as much as possible, and slightly ground or scratched upon a rough stone, to finish the shaping and remove the scale, or black oxidized surface, which would interfere with the color of the tempering.

Common knives are made entirely of iron, and the difference of price arises not merely from the difference in cost of the material, but from the greater facility of working. It should also be understood that, in many articles composed of steel welded to iron, the saving of steel is not the only advantage, for steel being more brittle than wrought iron, it is very desirable, in all articles subject to a transverse breaking strain or to concussion, that every part except the cutting or working edge should be of iron. Thus a hatchet made entirely of steel would be less durable than one of iron with a welded steel cutting edge, and so of other articles.

Table forks are forged rudely into the shape required, first as though but a single thick prong were required. The part for the prongs is then beaten out, and a stamping die is brought down upon it, which forms the prongs, with a thin film of steel between them; this is cut by a cutting die. Then they are softened and filled up, again hardened and tempered and ground to smooth and finish. The dry grinding of forks, needles, etc., is a very deleterious trade, on account of the particles of steel which enter the nostrils of the workmen, and produce most painful irritation, followed by a peculiar disease called "grinders asthma," which is said to shorten life so seriously that few dry grinders, exposed to the steel dust, reach forty years of age. Many remedies have been proposed for this. A magnetic mouthpiece was invented. But the workmen would not wear it, on account of its novelty, its grotesque appearance, the trouble of cleaning it, and the belief that if their trade were more healthy, greater numbers would enter it, and wages be reduced. A revolving fan, which sets in motion a current of air, that is carried by a pipe to the outside of the building, has been used with greater success, and is now in general use when it can be applied, though its introduction was much opposed by the workmen.—Scientific American.

"He hinted that he did not care to talk on the subject."

"Ah! Struck him at the wrong time, evidently. I hope you took the hint."

MESSRS. C. I. HOOD & CO.: Gentlemen—It affords me much pleasure to recommend HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA. My health has been such that for some years past I have been obliged to take a tonic of some kind in the spring, and have never found anything that hit my wants as your Sarsaparilla. It tones up my system, purifies my blood, sharpens my appetite, and seems to make me over. Respectfully yours,

J. P. THOMPSON.

One of our prominent business men said to us the other day: "In the spring my wife got all run down and could not eat anything; passing your store I saw a pile of HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA in the window, and I got a bottle. After she had been taking it a week she had a rousing appetite, and it did her everything. She took three bottles, and it was the best three dollars I ever invested."

FALL OF THE GREAT REPUBLIC.

Drawing on the Imagination—A Lively and Absurd Prediction of Impending Ruin—By Sir Henry Standish Coverdale, New York, 1895.

There is in these days a marked tendency toward discounting the future in the form of literary predictions. The "Battle of Dorking" has had a long line of successors, of which "The Fall of the Great Republic" is the latest and by no means one of the worst. In this instance it is Socialism through which the Republic is to be wrecked, and the anonymous author has worked out his conception so skillfully that few readers on closing the book will feel disposed to assert positively the impossibility of such a disaster. The growth of Socialism is supposed to be stimulated during several years by a secret organization. Finally a riot occurs at Chicago. It is put down with difficulty after much damage has been done. A few months later, through the co-operation of the trades-unions with the Socialists, another Chicago outbreak occurs. It is so serious that help is called for from all the principal cities in the Union. These denude themselves of their militia in response to the appeal, and when they are on the way, at a given signal revolution breaks out in every one of the now defenseless centres. The result scarcely requires to be narrated. The Socialists overwhelm the peaceful citizens. Anarchy of the most frightful character prevails. Massacre, pillage, arson are everywhere. Society has no time to collect itself. Its enemies are too thoroughly prepared. They destroy the telegraphs, seize the railroads, render effective combination against them impossible. The little Federal army is on the frontier fighting Indians when the revolution breaks out; but when it is brought back the Socialists have aleady conquered the country. The law-abiding citizens are fugitives in the unsettled regions. The towns and cities are all in the hands of the sworn foes of order. The Irish, who have held back during the overthrow of government, now through their leaders offer to the President to restore order on condition that their chiefs are virtually given full control of the Administration. The President, after fruitless resistance, consents, but, finding the Secretaries of State and War ignore him, he rebels, only to be at once deposed.

The Irish, German and French leaders propose to seize and imprison the diplomatic agents of London, Paris and Berlin. War is at once declared against the United States by these Powers, who enter into a firm alliance for the punishment of the Socialist revolutionaries. A powerful English fleet is swiftly dispatched, and Boston is seized before the new Washington Government can do anything. Then half a million European troops are landed on the shores of Long Island Sound, and after a stubborn fight New York is taken, though not until the Socialists have burned half of it. The defeated revolutionists retreat upon Washington but are overtaken by the allies and a desperate two day's battle is fought on the field of Gettysburg. The close of the second day sees the Socialist Army not merely beaten, but annihilated, reduced to a fugitive crowd without organization or capacity for resistance. A general occupation of the country by the allies concludes the narrative, which is supposed to be written by "Intendant for the Board of European Administration in the Province of New York," and to be published "By permission of the Bureau of Press Censorship."

It must be admitted that the idea has been artistically worked out, and that the literary skill of the author, which is considerable, imparts to it a verisimilitude productive of unpleasant feelings. Yet it is necessary to point out that the kind of apprehension presumably sought to be reinforced by such inventions is really a good deal like that from which Clever Grethel suffered in Grimm's story, when she saw the hatchet on the wall, and reflected that if she should marry Hans, and they should have a son, and he should grow up, and some day go down into the cellar, and the hatchet should fall on him, how terrible it would be! Just so, if the animalcules in a drop of water were really as large as they appear under the microscope, and if they should get loose, what havoc might they not cause.—N. Y. Tribune.

Horace Greeley's Prescience.

A correspondent of the St. Louis Republican tells the following story of Horac Greeley: "One day a letter came to the office bearing the following cabalistic letters: H. G. N. Y. This is all that was on the envelope except the postmark, which showed that the letter came from Lawrence, Kan. I call it a letter, but it was not a letter, for on opening the envelope not a scrap of paper was found inside, only a crumpled $1 note on some Ohio bank. In those days letters were sometimes not prepaid, and this was not; consequently a due bill was attached to the missive showing that the sum of three cents was to be collected. Mr. Greeley promptly paid the three cents. Who could be the sender? It puzzled the philosopher just a little only. 'Such doings can only be placed to the credit of Bill Reynolds,' mused Mr. Greeley. 'Bill always had idiosyncrasies, and when he had a truck farm out in Orange County would call, and not finding me in the sanctum would place a dollar bill for his subscription under a paperweight on my desk and leave. Bill told me he was going out West to try his "luck." The paper was mailed to William Reynolds, Lawrence, Kan., according to Mr. G.'s direction, and upon investigation it was found that Greeley's surmise was correct. Bill Reynolds was the right party."

—The editor of the Brule Index, at Kimball, D. T., claims to have in his possession a silver coin a little larger than a dime, smooth on both sides, and not rimmed, that was found at a depth of 140 feet in boring for a well, also a section of a socket-bone, thought to be from a man of enormous size.

—A child playing with matches caused the destruction of 232 houses in the Hungarian village of Nemedi, and made bankrupt the whole population.

TACT.

Good-Intentioned, But Because of His Lack of This Quality, an Unmitigated Nuisance.

Old man Knosey, of West Madison street, comes about as near being an angel in pantaloons as Chicago flesh and blood can hope to become, so far as intentions go, but in spite of the purity of his motives the guileless old man is in hot water a good share of the time, simply because he has no such thing as tact in his nature, and will persist in rubbing the hair the wrong way whenever he comes in contact with people. He means well, but no matter how hard he tries to be sociable, he is sure to put his foot in it. He has no guile or any other of the society essentials about him, and so whenever anything comes into his head he blurts it right out without any ceremony, regardless of circumstances and surroundings. The great fallacy of his life is that it is sociability to say things that should be left unsaid altogether, and ask questions about things that can in no way concern him.

Introduce him to a stranger, and within ten minutes he will ask the price of the man's clothing, article by article, from his hat to his boots. If jewelry is visible, he will want to know whether it is pure gold, or only "washed," and whether it was purchased new or at the pawnbroker's. He will also want to know if the man's watch keeps good time, and if he hasn't been getting his pantaloons dyed. When the conversational possibilities in that direction become exhausted, he will make the stranger's name a pretext for asking if he isn't related to a family of the same name in such and such a place, and then, very likely, he will proceed to remark that one of this very same family had to leave the neighborhood between two days for stealing sheep, and that another had been thrown out of the church for robbing the contribution box.

He will ask a doctor if he ever buried anybody out of the world by way of experiment, and catechise a druggist as to how frequently he has made fatal blunders in filling prescriptions. He will tell a lawyer that he can't understand how the tricks of the profession can be reconciled to the benefit of Christianity, and will ask a speculating deacon the difference between dealing in options and any other kind of gambling. He never hesitates to intimate to the infatuated mother of an uncomely infant that he has seen much prettier children than her babe, and then the poor man will lie awake all night shortly afterward, trying to make out why her husband has foreclosed a mortgage on his home. He will doze and nod in his pew at church, and then feel pained when he discovers that his pastor does not clasp his hand with reciprocal warmth.

In visiting a neighbor he walks in with muddy boots; sets his umbrella in the corner to drip on the carpet; leans back in his chair; mars up the rugs with his boot heels; soils the wall-paper with hair-oil; spits tobacco juice on the stove; and yet the poor man can not understand why they do not press him to come again, and why, after all his efforts to be sociable, they should treat him coolly. He tries hard to be cordial to all, and he endeavors most unselfishly, to be friendly, but can not succeed; and all simply through lack of discretion and want of tact.

Young man, if you want to slide through the world easily, study tact before you do Greek.—Chicago Ledger.

TRUSTY FARM HANDS.

The Connection Between Them and Their Employers Should Be One of Mutual Benefit.

Any man who goes into the employment of another should take his position with the determination of making the connection between himself and employer one of mutual benefit. Farm hands are liable to lose all but a selfish interest, and make their chief object to pass away the time and receive their money. The object is not usually an unwillingness on the part of the employe to perform sufficient labor, but a lack of carefulness and perfect trust.

Some hired men are too sensitive and appear unwilling to be instructed in the performance of any job, others are willing to do any way suggested, right or wrong, and to execute it in the quickest possible manner, regardless of result. Now, these faults are both unpleasant and unprofitable to the parties concerned. A hired man should become as one of the farmer's family, and make his employer's interest his own, and show himself trustworthy.

It makes no difference how much muscular strength a man may possess, or how much labor he may be able to perform, if he can not be trusted out of sight with the care of stock, the use of a team, or the performance of any job of work, he can not obtain wages the year through equal to those of a stripling youth who is honest and vigilant.

A farmer wishes to know when the "barn chores" are finished that the cattle and horses are all in their proper places, and made secure, and that they are plentifully fed; that when his team is away upon the road it is well cared for; the bars, fences, etc., are left in good order after passing through them; that gates and barn-yards are closed at night; that axes, wedges, hoes and other tools are laid up in their places. There is a satisfaction in having a man about the farm who will attend to all these matters with as much care as if they were his own, and a hired man of this stamp need never search for a position or work for common wages; he will always stand at a premium, and the only trouble he will find that is insurmountable will be to accommodate all who wish to secure his services.

It requires no more outlay of strength, no more time, only an exercise of care to do work right, and by this study to do things as they should be done, habits are formed, and theories inculcated, which will be of great value and lasting benefit when the employe shall have become the owner and manager of an estate.—Tribune and Farmer.

—A skeleton seven feet long supposed to be that of an Indian and to have been buried many years, was unearthed near New Castle, Pa., a few days ago.—Pittsburgh Post.

It Will Cure You!

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood if pure makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no others. Sold by Baker & Hall and C. A. Wright & Co.

In the literary as well as the military world, the most powerful abilities will often be found concealed under a rustic garb.

Scrofula diseases manifest themselves in the warm weather. Hood's Sarsaparilla cleanses the blood, and removes every taint of scrofula.

"The ladies especially go into ecstacies over Parker's Hair Balsam," writes Mr. J. H. Decker, druggist, of Finlay, Ohio. They say it is the most elegant dressing they ever used." Stops falling hair, restores color, promotes growth.

California has more suicides than any other State in the Union.

News About Town.

It is the current report about town that Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs is making some remarkable cures with people who are troubled with Coughs, Asthma, Bronchitis, and Consumption. Baker & Hall will give any person a trial bottle free of cost. It is guaranteed to relieve and cure. Price 50 cents and $1.

Disordered liver and kidneys will produce rheumatism and neuralgia. All liver and kidney diseases are cured by Hunt's Remedy.

Proclamation from Gov. Alger.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
LANSING, MICH., July 23, 1885.

The nation mourns to-day. Our great and beloved military chieftain, who saved the union from wreck and disintegration, has passed from earth. It is most fitting that every loyal citizen of the commonwealth, as well as of the nation, should by act and thought show that mark of respect due to the memory of this great hero. The capitol at Lansing will at once be appropriately draped, and all the state offices, so far as practicable, will be closed on the day of the funeral.

I sincerely hope that all citizens will, at their respective homes and places of business, display appropriate emblems of mourning, and that all business will be suspended during the hours of the funeral.

Let us all show a proper regard for the man who, by his great ability and fidelity to his country, carried us safely through the fiery ordeal of war.

Let us all remember and reverence the immortal name of Ulysses S. Grant.

RUSSELL A. ALGER.

By the Governor:
H. A. CONANT, Secretary of State.

L. E. Wheeler was at Clinton yesterday taking landscape views.

Regular Meeting Tecumseh Lodge 89 Knights of Honor next Monday night, Aug. 10, at 8 o'clock sharp for work in the degrees. Let every Knight try to be present.

D. T. HALL, Dictator.

The Morenci Observer has turned itself inside out; that is, it wears its "patent insides" on the inside where they belong. The new arrangement improves the paper, besides being more natural.

The M. & O. road will sell tickets to Devil's Lake during the G. A. R. encampment at one fare for the round trip. Tickets at this reduced rate will be sold on August 25th, 26th, 27th and 28th, and made good to return on August 29th.

A project is on foot for a Masonic excursion to Devils lake, in which the Manchester, Clinton, Dundee and Tecumseh Lodges will join. The matter has not yet assumed definite shape but will probably take place early in September.

Several Tecumseh people attended the promenade at Adam's Hotel, Sand Lake, last Saturday evening and report a very enjoyable time. Ollie Hunt's orchestra furnished the music, of course, and there was a large crowd in attendance.

The Addison rink is a very convenient building. The young sinners trip the light fantastic and rinkulate therein on week day evenings. The pious sinners hold Sabbath services there on Sunday. We regret to say that the week day meetings are the most numerously attended.

Addison Gadge has a wonderfully stimulating effect on the editorial imagination. Just read what the Courier man says about Lon O'Mealy. In speaking of the trial of John Rose for being a common drunkard, he says:

"Lon. O'Mealy, who is a lucid literary star in the galaxy of forensic eloquence, was counsel for the people and materially assisted the justice by a preponderance of legal erudition and acumen which rolled over his gustatory organ and through his oral orifice without apparent effort or footstrought."

THE DEVILS LAKE HOUSE

We took a flying trip to Devil's lake one day last week and put up at Allen's new hotel. The appearance of the place has been much improved since the opening. A railing has been put around the verandah on the south and east sides and the grounds have been cleared up and graded. The house is conducted in first class style. Good beds, an excellent table, plenty of fine boats and accommodating attendants make it a model house in which to enjoy a few days respite from hot weather. Treadwell's Landing which is run in connection with the house, has a fine grove and summer house with a good supply of tables and benches, making it a splendid locality for picnic and boating parties. Among the guests who have lately registered at Allen's we noticed Mrs. J. A. Eaton, Mrs. D. S. Stevens, Judge Geddes and wife of Adrian; R. McHugh of the M. & O. road; Ira Waterman of Hudson, Joe Smith and wife, Wm. H. Osborn and J. S. Osborn of Tecumseh. Many people from Homer and Hanover have also stopped there and Toledo has been represented by numerous arrivals. This Hotel is deserving of a good patronage and we are glad to see it receiving the same.

Geo. Schreder has given up his position in the telephone office. His place is supplied by Harry Corwin, of Union City, an experienced telephone man.

Granville Wood, of Detroit, was in town last week. He will be remembered as the gentleman who constructed the organs in the Baptist and Presbyterian churches.

There were 615 connections made on the state line at the telephone office in Tecumseh during the month of July. This is not counting the local connections around town.

The work on Brazee's new hotel at the north end of Devils lake is rapidly going forward, and the house will be ready for guests before the date of the G. A. R. encampment.

The copious rains of Sunday and Monday cooled the atmosphere very much and forced the mercury down several degrees. Even for this brief respite sweltering humanity will return thanks.

The band concert drew a good crowd at the park last Monday night and they were regaled with some fine music. The quartettes were exceptionally good and were received with repeated applause.

When Hudson young ladies get in to a quarrel they settle it in genuine Heenan Sayers style. The other day two sisters got into a war of words, when one of them struck out from the shoulder and knocked the other fair damsel down. Hudson is bound to lead the van in all modern improvements.

Adrian Press. If the Tecumseh Cornet band can blow out suitable uniforms in due season, the boys will accept an invitation from the Monroe band to observe its 25th anniversary, Aug. 20th. The citizens are asked to slip their digits into their pants pocket that holds their wallet, and aid the boys in dressing up.

As Frank Silvers was driving around the race track last Saturday, some one on the outside of the grounds shot off a gun as the horse came near to the place where he was, which so frightened it that it became unmanageable and ran away. Frank and the horse were uninjured but the sulky was smashed to pieces.

Hudson has a "suburb" called "Sleepy Hollow." Is that the port in which Bro. Schermerhorn anchors when overtaken by a thunder storm on a sail boat ride.—HERALD.

Brother Schermerhorn wouldn't anchor under the circumstances described, at all. He is too thorough a newspaper man to slide away from such a genuinely sensational piece of news as a thunder storm, in so queer a location.—Adrian Times.

On Saturday, Aug. 15th on account of the excursion to Toledo and thence by boat to Put-in-Bay, trains 31 and 34, on the M. & O. road will not be run on their regular schedule time, but will be run as follows:

New wheat is coming into the market.

Plenty of rain last Sunday and Monday.

New uniforms have been ordered for the Blissfield band.

The excursion train last Sunday over the M. & O. to Devil's Lake was well patronized.

Ed. Smith of Clinton, has let the contract to put in a full set of roller machinery in his mill.

The races advertised for last Saturday at Adrian were postponed until yesterday on account of the rain.

Guy Davidson, son of Frank Davidson, caught a badger last Monday which weighed 40½ pounds. Frank's son is a chip of the old block.

The Home Missionary meeting at the Methodist Episcopal church was postponed on account of rain. It will be held next Sunday evening.

Noah Lane, who was formerly one of Tecumseh's best barbers, was in town last week. He has opened a restaurant in Adrian on South Main street, second door south of Waldby's bank.

Wiggins, the weather prophet, has a brother in Charlevoix who is a Methodist minister. We are happy to state that Wiggins the parson is a more truthful man than Wiggins the prophet.

Clinton Local. The Woolen mill company have recently purchased some extra large clips of wool from the farmers in the vicinity of Norvell. One load, delivered here a few days ago, brought the stog sum of $475.

Blissfield is now enjoying the luxury of a mill dam suit. The injunction restraining Mrs. Love from rebuilding the dam, was dissolved last week. If Mrs. Love has set her heart on a dam, by all means let her have a dam. Let Mrs. Love alone to toy with the object of her affections, and Blissfield will soon be blessed with a dam. When a woman wills, she wills, you may depend on't.

Adrian Record. The young man of the Hudson Gazette exclaimed against the female custom of "ragging out the form with 16 to 25 thicknesses of cloth." Older heads of the county press having admonished him that he had put it on rather thick, he is led to remark, "That's all right. The fact of the matter is they have been deluded all these years, and they feel chagrined to think that a young unmarried man should 'scoop 'em in this style.' William speaks in a confident manner since his trip on the editorial excursion.

In reply to the HERALD query as to the whereabouts of Wiggins, the Adrian Press says:

Wiggins. Why, he's up in Adrian on his big, well cultivated farm, raising crops that would tickle a duke from the old country, could he but see them once on his acres. Wiggins is minding his p's and q's, and making up by hard work, what he lost by consenting to be a legislator from the second district. Wiggins isn't fooling around with the weather, but is content to take it cool in hot weather or make it hot for his opponents in cold weather. At present you can address him at Adrian. After January 1st, address to Lansing.

It was in a Kansas town. A drummer for a leading house stood at the counter. The editor entered. "Anything you desire to say in the paper this week?" "No," said the business man, "I don't believe in advertising." The drummer waited until the printer was half way to the door, then slowly taking up his sample case remarked, "Well, that lets me out. I do not care to sell on time to any man who, in this enlightened age, does not believe in advertising. I prefer to deal with live men. When I want to strike up a trade with dead men I'll go to the grave yard and swap tombstones. Good day, sir."—Ex.

Mr. John Lawson, formerly an old resident of this place, has, after an absence of nearly twelve years, returned to Addison. Mr. Lawson brought with him a leather dressing for boots, shoes, buggy tops and harnesses, which proves to be a first-class article and excels anything of the kind we have ever seen. This dressing contains nothing that will injure the leather. It will produce a shine that will last for several days, and nothing to which it is applied will wet through. He has sold a county right to J. H. Dayton, who intends to sell the dressing in this county. It will be ready for the market in a few days.—Addison Courier.

One of the handsomest pamphlets we have seen in many a day, is issued by the North American Review, for the benefit of the pedestal fund of the Bartholdi statue. It is entitled "The Statue of Liberty Enlightening the World. Described by the Sculptor Bartholdi." It is handsomely printed, among other beautiful engravings is one on steel of the great work in position, and is replete with information in regard to the pedestal, the statue, and many things which people want to know. We presume the pamphlet will be on sale in our local stores, but anyone wishing it can get it by sending 75 cents to the North American Review, New York.

Dr. L. G. North and family are rusticating at Sand Lake to-day.

About 20 bands will be present at Monroe festival on the 20th inst.

Tom Elliott now rides on a bicycle of his own manufacture. It is a dairy.

Capt. Foster fed at the Lakes House yesterday 126 for dinner and 94 for supper.

Baker & Hull's soda water is a prime drink this hot weather. Baker knows how to flavor the syrups.

Geo. Schreder has purchased a tenor horn and will become a member of the Tecumseh Cornet Band.

The foundation walls of Mrs. P. R. Adams' new residence are completed and the frame is going up this week.

L. E. Wheeler is preparing to give a couple of stereopticon entertainments in the Opera House at an early date.

The farmers' big picnic at Devil's Lake and the big band tournament at Monroe will both take place on the same day, Aug. 20th.

The farmers of Manchester, Brooklyn and adjoining towns will hold their annual picnic at Wampler's lake on Friday, Aug. 14th.

Misses Helen Munger and Dott Simmonds, of Dundee, were visiting their friend Etta Thorp last week, returning to their home on Friday.

Maude and Henry Crowell, of Cleveland, are spending a few weeks with their grand parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Briggs, of this village.

The Western Union telegraph office in Tecumseh is authorized to receive all donations to the Grant Monument fund. Hand in your offerings to Newberry.

Last Saturday was "Uncle Bill Nixon's" birthday. He brushed the dust off his life, donned his best suit, and gave our community a reminder of "ye olden time."

The effort to convict an Adrian saloonist for keeping open house on the 4th of July, failed. The average jury man seems to think that a free American citizen has a right to get boozy on the glorious 4th, if he wants to.

The band will give another concert in the square next Monday night. The quartette will play Luther's hymn, "A Strong hold Sure." Fischer's beautiful song "The Rose in the Forest," and Mosart's "German Students' Song."

J. A. Curry—J. W.
T. Cummins—Scribe.
C. E. Williamson—Treasurer.

Rev. C. E. Conley has returned from his northern trip. In consequence of the repairs now being put upon the Baptist meeting house, he will preach in the Opera House at the usual time on Sunday morning. The Sunday School will hold its usual session in the same place at 12 M. A very cordial invitation is extended to all.

Tickets are on sale by the M. & O. ticket agents this week to New York for one fare for the round trip. These tickets are sold only to military companies in uniform, and to G. A. R. Posts wearing badges, and when traveling in parties of ten or more, on one ticket. They are sold on the 5th and 6th and must be made good to return not later than August 11th.

It won't be a fatal objection. He will take it all the same, at the reduced salary. Hear ye him. The salary of the postmaster at Hudson has been reduced $200. Sorry for the sake of Hudson's next P. M., editor Schermerhorn.—Morenci Observer.

As we have said before, an official notification to the above effect has not arrived at this office yet, but if in the course of human events it does turn up, let us reiterate that President Cleveland can depend on our acceptance, even at the reduced salary. There's nothing small about us.—Hudson Gazette.

A grand excursion will run from Battle Creek to Toledo and Put in Bay via the M. & O. road on Saturday, Aug. 15th '85. From Toledo the steamer Chief Justice Waite will convey the excursionists to the Islands of Lake Erie, arriving at Put in Bay at 2 o'clock P. M. Passengers will have eight hours on the lake and two and one half hours on the Island. Train will leave Battle Creek at 5:30 A. M. and pass Tecumseh station at 5:55 A. M. Fare for the round trip only 95 cents from Tecumseh; from Tipton $1.00, from Ridgeway 90 cents, from Britton 85 cents.

The closing exercises of the occasion will be the funeral rites by the G. A. R.

BASE BALL.

Yesterday's Game between the Jackson and Tecumseh Clubs Results in an Easy Victory for the former by a Score of Seven to One.

The fine weather of yesterday drew quite a crowd to see the game between the Jackson base ball club and the Tecumseh nine. Although it was the first game the home club has played this season they played it in good shape, and lost for two errors at third base in the first part of the game. They would have held the Jackson's down pretty close. Beebe and Simonds, the battery, did excellent work. Beebe struck out the Jacksons in the first innings, and also the sixth and seventh.

The first innings resulted in a white wash for both sides, in the second, Jackson got in a score by an error on the part of the home nine, and also one in the third on a fumble by Heidenrich at third. In the fourth innings Chapman made a two bagger, stole to third and came home on a wild throw, which was the only score made by the home nine. Will Tray of the Jackson's also made a two bagger in the fifth innings. In the seventh a splendid double play was made by Anderson catching a fly and throwing to first, thus putting out two men.

The Jacksons played with the same old battery they had last year: the Tray brothers, and Will's curves puzzled the Tecumseh boys the same, and in fact a little more as they have had no practice batting this year. The usual amount of unnecessary kicking was done by the crowd on the umpiring, which was done in as fair and impartial a manner as could be done. We hope the T. B. B. A. will not stop with this one, but favor us with some more games before cold weather.

A Strange Coincidence.

A good many newspaper readers will remember that when Gen. Grant captured Vicksburg, some printers in the Union army found a page of the Vicksburg Citizen all ready to go to press, and worked off the edition, merely adding a paragraph, at the foot of the column remarking on the capture of the city. At the time—July 4, 1863—the little sheet had a large circulation. The Confederacy had run out of print paper, and that edition of the Citizen was printed on wall paper.

The paper was a single page, half column sheet printed only on one side, the plain side of the wall paper.

On Saturday last the Chicago Herald, with commendable enterprise, issued a fac simile of this historic paper as a timely supplement. The Herald has no job office attachment, and hence was compelled to give to an outside office the job of printing the supplement. And here comes in the strange coincidence. The foreman of the office to which the job was given, was the identical soldier who set up the final paragraph and worked off the original historic edition of the Vicksburg Citizen.

WEATHER REPORT FOR JULY

The month of July last past was a very hot and dry month, the hottest known for several years. From Dr. North we obtain the following table showing the status of the thermometer at 7 o'clock P. M. on each day during the month. These figures were taken from the psychrometer.

[illegible]

An extra coach went up the Jackson branch yesterday with the noon train, returning at 4 P. M. to accommodate a number of railroad officials who were making a tour of inspection. Among them were Supt. James E. Curtis, Wm. Kline, Supt. of telegraph and M. D. Jones, Asst. Supt.

Tom Lacy, of Milan, was in town yesterday.

Q. W. Delano's pacer took the first money in the pacing class at the races at Adrian yesterday.

Ellsworth Arnold, an old Tecumseh boy, was in town yesterday. He has a position in Cleveland.

Mrs. John Jones and daughter of Adrian, and Mrs. Phillips of Chicago, are spending the day at Judge Stacy's.

J. H. Barrows, the tin worker, is stopping up towards a few days. He is boarding at Morgan's for present.

Burt Morey, Miss Ryan, Fred Jones, Frank Vandyne and Burt Wells, of Manchester, were in town yesterday.

Delos DeBaron, of Toledo, was in town yesterday. He says his boss has flowed up every alleghenty since July 1st.

At a meeting of the township school inspectors held last Tuesday, Prof. Waterman, of Hudson, was re-elected county examiner for the regular term.

Mrs. Benj. Osborn, of Bay City, came to visit her sister, Mrs. J. H. Osborn, a short time ago, hoping to improve her failing health. Last week Thursday she was taken worse and died very suddenly Tuesday night.

Although short notice was given of the opening, a large crowd of skaters and spectators were present at the rink last night. During the evening Mr. Wood, a member of the Jackson base ball club, gave an exhibition of fancy skating.

We clip the following item from the Detroit Evening News of last Tuesday:

"TECUMSEH, Mich., August 4.—The scramble for the Tecumseh postoffice and the lengthy petitions circulated by various aspirants will prove a very large air bubble in due time. The incumbent, Fred Rosecrans, is a very popular citizen, eminently qualified for the position, and received, at the time of his appointment, the unanimous support of the entire community, irrespective of factions. He will, without question, serve his time out. At the expiration a nice, worthy gentleman, whom everybody respects and who is also fortunate enough to be related to Mr. Pacon, of Toledo, the president's brother-in-law, will quietly don the government shoes and deal out postage stamps to the good citizens of Tecumseh. It is a secret yet, but then everybody will be glad to know that his name is Peter J. Welling."

UNION S. S. PICNIC.

The M. E. and Presbyterian Sunday Schools of Tecumseh will join in a Sunday School picnic excursion to Devils lake on Wednesday of next week, Aug. 12th. It will be a basket picnic and will be held in the grove at Treadwell's landing, the grove connected with Allen's north hotel. Parties desiring dinner at the Devil's Lake House can be accommodated by leaving their names before Tuesday noon with Chas. A. Slayton or Dr. R. R. House. It is desirable that all who intend going should purchase tickets before Wednesday morning. This will avoid delay at the depot and enable the committee to order coaches enough the evening before to accommodate all. Committees of S. S. children will canvass for the sale of tickets before the day of the excursion. The train will leave the Tecumseh depot promptly at 7 o'clock A. M. Fare for the round trip, only 25 cents.

—New specimens of Spencer's photographic work are on exhibition at the post office.

—Wheat! Wheat! When you want to sell wheat remember C. A. Slayton is buying at highest market price.

—Ladies, you will find by going up stairs to Mrs. N. R. Brown's Millinery Rooms, good bargains. Good bargains in hats and Bonnets, and a variety of other goods, such as Lace and Muslin Baby Bonnets, Black Lace Caps for elderly ladies, School Hats, &c.

—You can buy a good Hay Rack for $7.00 of C. A. Slayton.

Hair Vigor
restores, with the glossy and freshness of youth, faded or gray hair to a natural, rich brown color or deep black, as may be desired. Its use might not bring back the hair if it has fallen off, but it will stop its falling, and the hair thickened, and baldness often, though not always, cured.
It checks the growth of the hair, and stimulates a healthy growth to take its place. It prevents scalp diseases and baldness, and heals many other troubles peculiar to the scalp. KEEP IT PURE.
The Life is the Blood—Prevent Disease—Surgery the Last Resort—A Telling Letter.
Here is a fact for you to think over. Modern Science proves that diseases, in spite of a great variety they seem to take, proceed from one primarily low cause. It is for this reason that some single medicine specifically made to cure a range of complaints seems to find opportunity to act directly upon the blood and nerves. Which, a medical preparation acts at once upon the digestive and urinary organs, and also purifies the blood, the list of diseases it will cure is astonishing. For weak men there is said to possess this power. Those which actually do [illegible] the very fact.
It is considered that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y., being in its effects [illegible] for all diseases arising from a foul or impure state of the system. Hence it is more than likely that the writer of the following letter had tried Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy ten years ago, he would never have suffered from cancer.
PITTSFIELD, Mass., March 22, 1884.
Dr. David Kennedy,
Dear Sir—About six years ago I was obliged to resort to external treatment for the removal of a cancerous growth on my upper lip. On my return home I became sensible that my blood needed a thorough cleansing. My whole system too required toning up. While casting about for the best medicine to do this, your "FAVORITE REMEDY" was so highly recommended to me, feeling that I resolved to try it. I did so, and the result surprised me. It was effectual in every respect. I soon got over the depression produced by the operation, and since the "Favorite Remedy," which I have continued to use in small doses, has kept me in such good health and strength as I never had before, nor expected to have. It is the best blood purifier in the world. I am sincerely thankful.
